Mr. MANN. Yes; that is very true, but there is a direct authority of Congress to pay this money over to the Philippine government. Can the gentleman inform us anything of the amount of the tonnage taxes that we are paying into the Philippine treasury? That is a new thing to me, I will confess. I knew that we were paying over the customs dues and everything of that kind, but I did not know that we were contributing to the Philippine government a tonnage tax collected on this side of the ocean, which is supposed to be used for other purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that in a recent decision by the Comptroller of the Treasury the Comptroller calls particular attention to the different classes of funds in the Treasury of the United States, calling some of them general funds, some special, and some of them trust funds; and one of the questions involved in that decision was whether a certain tonnage tax collected under the act—I have forgotten the date—which authorizes the payment or rebate to the Philippine Islands of all customs dues as well as tonnage taxes was covered in by that law, and the Comptroller of the Treasury held that it was. The law covers not only customs dues but also tonnage taxes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that it was the intention and was so provided in that law of Congress that Congress intended to turn over to the Philippine government not merely the customs dues collected here on goods coming from there, but also the tonnage taxes?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is a new thing to me. I shall object as far as I can, and I shall insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes from the statement of the chairman of the committee that this can not be done without legislation, so that that would change existing law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Charters, constitutions, and organic laws: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to withhold payment of the sum of $10,000 appropriated by the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, for the purchase of the manuscript of a new edition of "Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws," pending the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, which is hereby authorized to pass upon the question of the completeness and accuracy of the work and to determine whether the manuscript submitted is the identical, specific manuscript which Congress agreed to buy and for whose purchase it appropriated $10,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the paragraph las read, beginning at line 17, on page 8, and continuing to line 5, on page 9, on the ground that it changes existing law.

Mr. DAWSON. Would the gentleman be willing to reserve the point of order until some explanation can be made of the merits of this question.

Mr. PERKINS. I am willing to reserve the point of order in order that the gentleman may make an explanation that he sees fit. But I feel bound to say in fairness to the Chair that I shall finally insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that my distinguished friend from New York was here the other day when this proposition was under discussion, but I am sure that if he appreciated the facts surrounding this particular item he would not desire to raise the point of order upon this provision, which is one purely of a protective character to the Government. If the gentleman from New York understood the merits of this proposition I am sure that he would not want to be a party to foisting something upon the Government which ought not to be foisted upon it.

In brief, the facts in the case are these: At the last session of Congress an appropriation of money was made for the purchase of the manuscript and printing a new edition of the charters, constitutions, and organic laws of the United States.

The last previous edition had been published some thirty years ago, and aside from being out of print was now entirely incomplete. So Congress, recognizing the necessity for a new edition of this work, provided for the appropriation of money. When the manuscript was presented to the Public Printer in conformity with this legislation, serious charges were made against the character of the manuscript—so serious that when the warrants in payment thereof came to the Secretary of the Treasury he declined to pay the money, and at the same time transmitted an official letter to Congress saying that he would withhold the payment of this sum of money until Congress had designated some suitable committee to pass upon the worth and the completeness of the manuscript.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who was the author of this?

Mr. DAWSON. A gentleman by the name of Thorpe, formerly a resident of the State of Pennsylvania, and now, I think, a resident of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say he is a professor of the University of Pennsylvania, a noted author and historical writer—Prof. Francis N. Thorpe, who has written several works on constitutional history.

Mr. DAWSON. So, in conformity with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, this item appears in this bill. It is there purely as a matter of protection to the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To what extent is this new law? It seems to have been previously authorized.

Mr. DAWSON. Congress, at the last session, provided for the purchase of the manuscript and publication of the document. When the manuscript was submitted it was found that it was not the one which Congress intended to purchase. Instead of being a complete edition it is an incomplete and inaccurate edition. So the proposition resolves itself into a question whether or not we desire that this money shall be paid for a manuscript that was not the one which Congress intended to purchase and for a manuscript which, instead of being new, 75 per cent of it is simply pages cut from Ben: Perley Poore's work, published thirty years ago. That is the whole situation in a nutshell, and I am sure my distinguished friend from New York does not desire to become a party to such a performance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And this provision is to prevent some sort of fraud, as you might term it, being perpetrated on the Government, and if this provision goes out we will have to accept it and pay for it; is that the idea?

Mr. DAWSON. That is perhaps——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not mean to say it is a fraud, but without this provision we might be compelled to take an article we did not want. It is a kind of police provision, it seems to me.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman inform me whether or not this matter is now pending in the courts?

Mr. DAWSON. I can, and it gives me great pleasure to do so. It is pending in the courts in this manner: When the Secretary of the Treasury declined to pay this money, Professor Thorpe began mandamus proceedings to compel him to pay it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If this provision is left in here it will arm the Secretary of the Treasury to protect the Government against a thing which the Secretary thinks is wrong; is that the idea?

Mr. BATES. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. The matter of the propriety and legality of making this payment is now pending in the Federal courts before a Federal judge.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that if this provision remains in the bill, then we will be assured that the manuscript which is finally accepted is a complete one and is the manuscript that Congress intended to purchase when it made the appropriation. If the item goes out, then for the time being the Government is without that protection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Government is left to the courts.

Mr. DAWSON. If the item goes out and we decline to act upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and he, with knowledge of the facts, declines to pay the money——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that goes back to what I tried to say a minute ago; it looks like this provision is to arm the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent this thing being imposed on the Government, or on Congress, or on the people because it is not the thing that the Government contracted for.

Mr. DAWSON. That is exactly right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And if it goes out, it will be turned over to the mandamus proceeding.

Mr. DAWSON. I want to explain to my friend from Pennsylvania and to the committee the situation from the standpoint of the court proceedings. As I said, Professor Thorpe brought a mandamus proceeding in the courts to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the money. The district attorney filed his return thereto, and the case was argued on last Friday before Justice Wright, I believe, and he reserved his decision. Not more than thirty minutes ago I was advised upon inquiry that Justice Wright had filed his decision in the matter. That decision was favorable to the contention of the Government and of the Secretary of the Treasury. That decision makes it clear to me that the attorneys for Professor Thorpe seek to sue the Government on a contract under the guise of a mandamus proceeding.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then the Government has practically won the case, from what the gentleman says. What is the use of having this at all? The gentleman says it is favorable to the Government.

Mr. DAWSON. Even if the Government does win the case, as I believe it will, then this provision is absolutely essential in order that we may have some committee to pass upon the completeness of this manuscript.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I see.

Mr. DAWSON. And so in the light of the facts surrounding this particular item, I trust, and I believe, that the point of order will not be made.

Mr. PERKINS. I am sorry to disappoint my friend from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON]. Of the merits of this proposition I know very little, I will say frankly. An appropriation of $10,000 was made to pay for certain collections or compilations of charters. It appears now that a distinguished professor from Iowa thinks he was the man intended, or, at least, he is the man who desires to get the $10,000. A distinguished professor from Pennsylvania has the same idea, and thus far, I judge, has somewhat the advantage of the position. As to that, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say. In behalf of some Members of the House who are not here I agreed to present to the Chair the sole question the Chair has to deal with, not the rights or wrongs between these two distinguished professors, but whether this provision is subject to a point of order, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, with very great confidence that it is subject to a point of order. The law to-day is this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is, then, ready to rule. It is clear to the Chair——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit just one observation on the point of order before the ruling is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] to resume his argument.

Mr. PERKINS. I am pleased to see that the Chair after reading the paragraph evidently thought it was subject to a point of order, because, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that would be apparent to anyone familiar with the principles of our parliamentary law. There is to-day a law upon the statute books which says that the sum of $10,000 shall be paid by the Treasury for an edition of charters, constitutions, and organic laws.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman that he leaves out one important word there. It does not read "an edition," but it reads "a new edition."

Mr. PERKINS. Very well, a new edition. There is an appropriation for the payment of $10,000 for a new edition of charters and constitutions. If any question shall arise between the Government and the person presenting them, as to whether they correspond, it may be for the court to say upon mandamus or other proceeding when the new edition is presented. So far as Congress is concerned, Mr. Chairman, we are bound by our own rules of procedure.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is on the distinguished Committee on Printing?

Mr. PERKINS. I have that honor; yes.

Mr. MANN. And is hence a sort of a guardian of the conscience of the House on printing.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is entirely right.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman must know something of the merits of this proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. There the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MANN. I have never known any proposition to come before the House on which the gentleman could not contribute light on its merits.

Mr. PERKINS. I know about the parliamentary merits of this proposition very well.

Mr. MANN. How does such a proposition come into the laws? I have, and I presume the gentleman has, a very excellent copy of the Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws in two or three volumes. It has been of great value to me. Was it intended to pay $10,000 to write new charters and new constitutions for the States of the Union?

When the gentleman has answered these inquiries, will he in the same connection answer another? Can it be possible that in a contest between Iowa and Pennsylvania a very distinguished gentleman connected with a certain body of the Government and high in authority on questions of appropriation has been taken into a game of confidence, thinking the $10,000 would go to his State, and thereupon Pennsylvania comes in and grabs the money?

Mr. PERKINS. I must refer the gentleman to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to answer that question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a member of the committee holding entire power over the matter of printing, and being on the committee he ought to know, and I am quite sure he does know.

Mr. PERKINS. The matter that is referred to in this bill did not come before the committee, and I must refer the question to members of the other committee.

Mr. MANN. I understand that it is the universal rule, wherever there is anything of new legislation put on the bill, that it is not allowed in conference until the appropriate committee has consented to it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I wish to suggest in this connection that I understand this legislation got into the bill last year owing to the fact that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations called it up on that one day of the session when the gentleman from Illinois was not present devoting his usual care to the proceedings. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. That day does not exist. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Now, if this airy persiflage is ended I will proceed to discuss the merits of the point of order. I have no suggestion to make as to whether this appropriation ought to have been passed. It was passed, and it is the law. The question which we have to pass upon is whether this provision changes the law that has been enacted, whether wisely or foolishly, whether with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois or in his absence. That it makes a change seems manifest. I have only to read the provision. There being an absolute appropriation for the payment of $10,000, this provision says that the Secretary of the Treasury is directed—not merely authorized—but directed to withhold the payment of that sum of $10,000. There is the substance, except with the qualification afterwards. Does it not absolutely repeal the law, which now stands to-day? It is the law that $10,000 shall be paid. In this appropriation bill it is sought to be enacted that the $10,000 shall not be paid. How can it be said for one moment that it is not a change of the law which to-day stands upon the statute books? To-day the person authorized in the provision has the right to receive $10,000 for his work. To-morrow, if this amendment is adopted and this bill pass in the shape it is, he has not the right to receive 10,000 cents.

It is a serious matter for my distinguished friend from Minnesota to contend that this does not amount to a change of law, that a man can be paid at one time and can not be paid at another. Thus, I say, a change of existing law has been enacted by a clause of an appropriation bill.

Further, if the chairman please, the Joint Committee on the Library up to this moment has no more power on this question than has the chairman or any member of this committee. If this law is passed, there is vested an authority by which they shall ascertain the completeness and accuracy of the work and determine whether the manuscript submitted is the manuscript for which Congress was to pay. Now, as to a change of existing law. What has the Committee on the Library to say about this to-day? No more than any one of the pages of this House. But to-morrow it will have the right to reject the manuscript and say that no one who makes a claim against the Government shall be paid because the Committee on the Library decides that it is not, in the words of this amendment, a complete, accurate work, such as was intended by the statute.

Now, as the Chairman is familiar with parliamentary law, I shall not occupy his time by any long discussion. But let me read a few analogous cases—and it was possible in selecting a dozen to have selected a hundred. For instance, where it is formerly enacted that a certain payment might be made, and it was sought to change the word "may" to the word "shall," it was held by the Chair to be a change of existing law. There the provision was that the payment shall be made. A provision that it shall not be made is certainly a provision changing existing law. I have another authority that an amendment taking away from a Department officer a power conferred by law was held to be a change of existing law. Here we have a department or committee that is provided with authority to investigate, and that has been held to be a change of law.

A limitation on the discretion exercised by a bureau has been held to be a change of law. Here is a limitation upon the power held by the Secretary of the Treasury to make this payment, which is prevented unless a favorable decision is made by a new body.

The enactment of positive law where none exists is a change of law. To-day there is no provision of law by which the Committee on the Library or anybody else can pass upon this manuscript. To-morrow that authority will be committed to it. This has been held to be a change of law.

Now, my friend from Minnesota will undoubtedly say that a limitation upon a payment may be made. Let me suggest to the chairman two perfectly satisfactory answers to that position. In the first place the limitation must be made at the time of the appropriation. You can not pass a provision for an absolute payment and then subsequently put into that law, put upon that power of payment, provisions that were not adopted by Congress at the time it made the appropriation. That is not a limitation, but it becomes a change ingrafted upon the existing law.

Furthermore, in this case there is no such limitation. A provision that $10,000 be paid, provided that none of it shall be paid except to persons situated in a certain way, might be a limitation on an appropriation. Here, on the other hand, a committee of Congress is taken, and upon that committee is vested a new authority, by which it can prevent the payment of a sum of money heretofore authorized by act of Congress.

Now, just a word or two as to cases such as that. The limitation must be upon the appropriation, as held in a very recent case, and not an affirmative limitation upon official functions. This is exactly that. This is an affirmative limitation, an affirmative statement of official functions, to wit, the official functions of the Committee on the Library, by which they can not only limit this payment, but prevent the payment altogether.

And still more analogous—and this is the last word with which I shall weary the Chairman—I read from the Digest a heading exactly in these words, to which I ask the Chairman's attention:

An amendment proposing to make the payment of the salaries of certain officials or employees dependent upon a contingency was held to be a change of law and not a limitation.

Here is a provision proposing to make the payment, not of a salary but of a sum of money earned for certain services, dependent upon a certain contingency, to wit, the contingency that the members of the Committee on the Library shall see fit to approve of what has been done. I will not further weary the Chairman nor take the time of the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that this paragraph is not subject to a point of order. Under a provision incorporated in the sundry civil bill this man was authorized to do a certain thing, to present Congress with a new edition of Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws. He offered that work to the Public Printer and to the Secretary of the Treasury, first to print and second for payment. They discovered, as they believed, that he had not complied with the purpose for which the $10,000 was appropriated. The matter comes to the House and to the Appropriation Committee, and this paragraph is inserted, not to change the law, but it is merely a delay in the completion of the contract, in order that Congress, which authorized the appropriation in the sundry civil bill, may have an opportunity to see if he has performed this contract as he should have done and as we expected him to do. There is no change of law. It is a mere matter of delay that the committee ask this House to adopt to protect the House and the country in this matter. That is all there is in it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Did anybody pass on this manuscript before Congress authorized its purchase?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We could not pass on it before we authorized it, because it did not exist.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Did the act which authorized the expenditure of the $10,000 contemplate that Congress was going to edit the work?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It certainly contemplated that the Congress of the United States could accept or reject the work, certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the act authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract with this author. That ended the functions of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this point of order raises an interesting question, and so far as I know, a new question. If the appropriation were now proposed, and it were proposed to amend it by offering the new matter contained in this provision, the amendment would be held in order as a limitation upon the appropriation.

I think there is no one who would dispute the proposition that as a limitation this would be in order if the appropriation was about to be made. The appropriation has been made, but as the appropriation has not been expended, is it now within the power of the House to impose the limitation that would have been in order in the first instance, even though subsequent to the adoption of the appropriation? We have here in the Manual and Digest of Rules, on page 343, this provision:

In making an appropriation for a purpose the House may, under the rule, provide that a portion of the same shall be withheld under certain conditions.

This appropriation is yet under the control of the Government. It has not been expended, and if the new matter now proposed would have been in order at the time the original appropriation was made, as a limitation, and the appropriation still being in the control of the Government, Congress would have absolute power to impose the limitation at this time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I am almost ashamed to say anything on the subject under discussion, because it seems so plain that nothing can be said about it. The last suggestion made by my friend lacks force for the reason that this is not a limitation and does not pretend to be a limitation on the appropriation. The limitation is on the Secretary of the Treasury. It is a direction to him as to how he shall act under certan circumstances. It seems to me too plain to talk about that this is a change of exising law in two particulars. First, because it directs the Secretary of the Treasury not to do that which the law says he shall do, and in the second place it confers a power on the Committee on the Library that under the law does not now exist.

The CHAIRMAN. The section under consideration directs the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold the payment of an appropriation formerly made by Congress and confers certain power and authority on the Joint Committee on the Library which it does not now have by law. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that it is an enactment of law where none now exists, and is therefore a change of existing law. As the gentleman from New York insists on his point of order, the Chair feels that he must sustain it. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNAL REVENUE.

For salaries and expenses of forty revenue agents provided for by law and fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries and expenses of storekeepers and storekeeper-gaugers, $150,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to the paragraph on the Life-Saving Service——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That paragraph has been passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I am aware of that. I am merely asking about it for information, and not to make a motion affecting the paragraph. I wish to ask the gentleman by whom is the amount of payment to the Life-Saving Service officers fixed?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is fixed by statute. The act of Congress approved March 2, 1907, making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, provides:

That hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and the request of the above authority is made in order that the necessary funds may be available to pay the allowance for heat and light to which the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who are detailed for duty in the Life-Saving Service are entitled under section 3 of the act of April 12, 1902, providing that officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service "shall hereafter receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for officers of corresponding rank in the Army. * * *"

Mr. PERKINS. The question I wanted to ask is in reference to the Life-Saving Service officers: Is their pay fixed uniformly by the Appropriation Committee or by some Department in proportion to the work they are supposed to do?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is fixed by statute.

Mr. MANN. The pay of the revenue-cutter officers is fixed by law.

Mr. PERKINS. It is uniform?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is the pay for the corresponding rank in the Army.

Mr. PERKINS. Sometimes changes are made in the time in which the office or station is required to be kept open. How is that regulated?

Mr. MANN. The revenue-cutter officers, of course, are not life-saving officers, but the revenue-cutter officers are detailed from the Revenue-Cutter Service to the Life-Saving Service as inspectors. In various life-saving districts a revenue-cutter officer is detailed for an inspector, that being the method by which the revenue-cutter officer obtains shore duty.

But they are paid as revenue-cutter officers, and they receive their pay from the appropriations for the Revenue-Cutter Service, that pay being fixed by statute according to rank. This proposition is to pay them an allowance out of the Life-Saving Service. The Light-House Service, so far as the inspections are concerned, are detailed from the Navy. Inspectors in the Light-House Service are naval officers.

Mr. PERKINS. Who are the light-house keepers? They are not naval officers.

Mr. MANN. No; nor are the life-saving officers revenue-cutter officers. The Light-House Service has a regular corps of servants, but the inspectors are naval officers and the engineers are Army officers.

Mr. PERKINS. Who fixes the pay of the light-house keepers?

Mr. MANN. The light-house keepers' pay is fixed partly by statute and partly by the Light-House Board under an appropriation which is made. The Light-House Board has earnestly recommended that they be authorized to slightly increase the pay of the light-house keepers, which now ranges from possibly $55 down. I am not sure but a few of them get as high as $60.

Mr. PERKINS. A month?

Mr. MANN. A month.

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is a complicated system.

Mr. PERKINS. I should judge so.

Mr. MANN. Originally the Light-House Service grew out, possibly, of the naval service. The Life-Saving Service grew out of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and for that reason these details are made of these officers as inspectors, partly because of their familiarity with it, and undoubtedly partly because it gives an opportunity for shore duties to officers who otherwise would have no shore duty.

Mr. DALZELL. What are the Life-Saving Service paid? Are they paid all the year round, or only part of the year?

Mr. MANN. The Life-Saving Service on the Atlantic coast, on the seacoast, are paid ten months in the year $65 a month, and on the Lakes they are paid for eight months in the year at the same salary.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay accounts for legislative expenses, Territory of Oklahoma, as set forth on page 16 of House Document No. 458 of the present session of Congress, $545.75.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. VREELAND. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the defraying of the expenses of the elections held as provided for in the enabling act of Oklahoma, the holding of the constitutional convention held in pursuance and by virtue thereof, and for the payment of the salaries, mileage, and expenses of members and other officers of the constitutional convention, payment of temporary county officers in the newly organized counties during the interim between the passage of the enabling act and the issuing of the statehood proclamation for necessary printing of ballots incident to the said elections. The respective salaries, mileage, and other expenses to be the same as provided by the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma prior to statehood.

The disbursements made hereunder shall be through the Secretary of the Interior, upon sworn vouchers of actual service rendered and actual expense incurred, the same to be approved and countersigned by the governor, State treasurer, and not less than three of the members of the supreme court of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. VREELAND. I reserve the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But the gentleman has to make it when it is read.

Mr. VREELAND. I reserved it before and after.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in support of that amendment that when the enabling act was passed permitting the Territories of Oklahoma and Indian to be brought into the Union as one State, in section 5 of that enabling act there was a provision that the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, was appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the election and constitutional convention. When the constitutional districts were laid out in the two Territories now comprising the State and the election for constitutional delegates was held and the constitutional delegates assembled to write that constitution, that appropriation was inadequate, it was not sufficient to meet the demands of the expenses that were necessary, and incident to the writing of the constitution and holding the subsequent election for the vote upon the constitution, as well as the State officers. We in Oklahoma feel that through the generosity of the Congress of the United States in kindly permitting us to be admitted into the Union that that generosity should be extended one step further, and the actual expense of drafting our constitution and holding our first elections should be borne by the Government of the United States. It is true that while we are the infant and the forty-sixth State, we are not the forty-sixth State in the Union in population. We occupy a different position, being about the twenty-third State in the Union in population, but our counties are new, many of them recently laid on one side of an imaginary line, which, when that enabling act was passed, was the territory known as the Five Civilized Tribes, that had no organized Territorial form of government.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know what this money was expended for, and can he give the House any information about the items of expense that made up this $220,000 which he seeks to have appropriated?

Mr. DAVENPORT. In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I can not in detail itemize the number of clerks, the number of delegates, and the number of days that they served while they were writing the constitution or the number of election judges who were appointed on the election board of our State, but in round numbers, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask another question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Allow me to finish this. In round numbers, as nearly as we can give it, it amounted to $214,335.25.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe now that the Government ought to make an appropriation for the amount that he seeks to have appropriated without having any evidence whatever that the money was expended for the purposes for which he says it was expended?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I believe this, Mr. Chairman, that the money should be appropriated in the very language that was in the enabling act, and then it is provided in my amendment that it shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior and the vouchers approved by the governor, the treasurer of the State, and not less than three judges of the supreme court of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Congress of the United States has already appropriated $100,000 to defray the expenses incident to the admission of Oklahoma. The largest amount Congress has ever appropriated for the benefit of any Territory coming into the Union as a State prior to this time was $30,000. In other words, Oklahoma has received $70,000 in excess of what any other Territory in the Union has received.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, not being in a position to correctly advise the gentleman, who is so much my senior in point of service, as to the amount that has been appropriated for the other States in the Union, I will say to him in reply there never was in the history of this Union a State which entered into the Union with one-twentieth part of the population which we have to-day, 1,414,000 people.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not that a reason the State is better prepared and can better afford to pay the expenses of admission than other States that have come in with far less population and far less wealth than Oklahoma?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to say to the gentleman, no; because two-thirds of that population are Indians upon Indian lands which this Government will not yet permit us to tax and from which, therefore, there is no way to derive revenue by taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell the House how much money the State of Oklahoma has in its treasury out of which they could pay this sum?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact the State of Oklahoma has four or five million dollars in its treasury?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will answer the gentleman by saying no, and if he can contradict the statement I will ask him to do so. But, my fellow citizens and my fellow legislators, listen to me for a minute. For a long time we clamored to get into the Union and to become one of the sister States of this Union. Congress evidently in its wisdom intended to appropriate a sufficient amount of funds to permit us to come in free from the burden of the expense of statehood inauguration and organization. I believe, irrespective of what any gentleman may hold to the contrary, that we should have that expense paid by the Government of the United States. There never was a State in this Union which went in with as many difficulties and as many complications to settle as the State of Oklahoma. On one side of a general line we had an organized Territory; on the other side we had, to use a common expression, a disorganized Territory, a Territory without any organized government, controlled only and solely by our Interior Department of the United States and the Federal courts that had been kindly furnished us in that section of the country; so I say to you it is my opinion when our delegates went to write that constitution they undertook the most difficult task of State forming that has ever been undertaken by any State since the thirteen colonies.

And I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is justice to my people and to my State that this expense should be met by the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] be granted five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVENPORT. In conclusion, I desire to say, gentlemen, I care not what may have been said concerning the work performed in that new State, we have to-day a constitution written for that State that to me is as good as any in the United States, if not better. As an evidence of that fact, I want to say to the gentlemen on the majority side of this House, and every Representative from Oklahoma will bear me out in it, that irrespective of political affiliations the people of the State of Oklahoma gave more than a hundred thousand majority for the adoption of that constitution. And as an evidence of the kind and character of the constitution that we have, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to have it incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Constitution of the State of Oklahoma.

PREAMBLE.

Invoking the guidance of Almighty God, in order to secure and perpetuate the blessing of liberty; to secure just and rightful government; to promote our mutual welfare and happiness, we, the people of the State of Oklahoma, do ordain and establish this Constitution.

ARTICLE I.

FEDERAL RELATIONS.

SECTION 1. The State of Oklahoma is an inseparable part of the Federal Union, and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land.

SEC. 2. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of the State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship; and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. Polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

SEC. 3. The people inhabiting the State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title in or to any unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian, tribe, or nation; and that until the title to any such public land shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the jurisdiction, disposal, and control of the United States. Land belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the limits of the State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the land belonging to residents thereof. No taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use.

SEC. 4. The debts and liabilities of the Territory of Oklahoma are hereby assumed and shall be paid by the State.

SEC. 5. Provisions shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of the State and free from sectarian control; and said schools shall always be conducted in English: Provided, That nothing herein shall preclude the teaching of other languages in said public schools: And provided further, That this shall not be construed to prevent the establishment and maintenance of separate schools for white and colored children.

SEC. 6. The State shall never enact any law restricting or abridging the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

SEC. 7. The manufacture, sale, barter, giving away, or otherwise furnishing, except as hereinafter provided, of intoxicating liquors within those parts of the State, heretofore known as the Indian Territory and the Osage Indian Reservation, and within any other parts of the State which existed as Indian reservations on the first day of January, Nineteen Hundred and Six, is prohibited for a period of twenty-one years from the date of the admission of the State into the Union, and thereafter until the people of the State shall otherwise provide by amendment of this Constitution and proper State legislation. Any person, individual or corporate, who shall manufacture, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish any intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, and wine, contrary to provisions of this section, or who shall, within the above described portions of the State, advertise for sale or solicit the purchase of any such liquors, or who shall ship or in any way convey such liquors from other parts of the State into the portions hereinbefore described, shall be punished, on conviction thereof, by fine not less than fifty dollars and by imprisonment not less than thirty days for each offense: Provided, That the Legislature may provide by law for one agency under the supervision of the State in each incorporated town of not less than two thousand population in the portions of the State hereinbefore described; and if there be no incorporated town of two thousand population in any county in said portions of the State, such county shall be entitled to have one such agency, for the sale of such liquors for medicinal purposes; and for the sale, for industrial purposes, of alcohol which shall have been denaturized by some process approved by the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and for the sale of alcohol for scientific purposes to such scientific institutions, universities, and colleges as are authorized to procure the same free of tax under the laws of the United States; and for the sale of such liquors to any apothecary who shall have executed an approved bond, in a sum not less than one thousand dollars, conditioned that none of such liquors shall be used or disposed of for any purpose other than in the compounding of prescriptions or other medicines, the sale of which would not subject him to the payment of the special tax required of liquor dealers by the United States, and the payment of such special tax by any person within the parts of the State hereinabove defined shall constitute prima facie evidence of his intention to violate the provisions of this section. No sale shall be made except upon the sworn statement of the applicant in writing setting forth the purpose for which the liquor is to be used, and no sale shall be made for medicinal purposes except sales to apothecaries as hereinabove provided unless such statement shall be accompanied by a bona fide prescription signed by a regular practicing physician, which prescription shall not be filled more than once. Each sale shall be duly registered, and the register thereof, together with the affidavits and prescriptions pertaining thereto, shall be open to inspection by any officer or citizen of the State at all times during business hours. Any person who shall knowingly make a false affidavit for the purpose aforesaid shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Any physician who shall prescribe any such liquor, except for the treatment of disease which, after his own personal diagnosis, he shall deem to require such treatment, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by fine of not less than two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any person connected with any such agency, who shall be convicted of making any sale or other disposition of liquor contrary to these provisions, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one year and one day. Upon the admission of the State into the Union these provisions shall be immediately enforcible in the courts of the State.

ARTICLE II.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. All political power is inherent in the people; and government is instituted for their protection, security, and benefit, and to promote their general welfare; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it: Provided, Such change be not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 2. All persons have the inherent right to life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry.

SEC. 3. The people have the right peaceably to assembly for their own good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for redress of grievances by petition, address, or remonstrance.

SEC. 4. No power, civil or military, shall ever interfere to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage by those entitled to such right.

SEC. 5. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary, or sectarian institution as such.

SEC. 6. The courts of justice of the State shall be open to every person, and speedy and certain remedy afforded for every wrong and for every injury to person, property, or reputation; and right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, delay, or prejudice.

SEC. 7. No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

SEC. 8. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof of guilt is evident, or the presumption therefor is great.

SEC. 9. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

SEC. 10. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall never be suspended by the authorities of this State.

SEC. 11. Every person elected or appointed to any office or employment of trust or profit under the laws of the State, or under any ordinance of any municipality thereof, shall give personal attention to the duties of the office to which he is elected or appointed.

SEC. 12. No member of Congress from this State, or person holding any office of trust or profit under the laws of any other State, or of the United States, shall hold any office of trust or profit under the laws of this State.

SEC. 13. Imprisonment for debt is prohibited, except for the non-payment of fines and penalties imposed for the violation of law.

SEC. 14. The military shall be held in strict subordination to the civil authorities. No soldier shall be quartered in any house, in time of peace, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, except in a manner to be prescribed by law.

SEC. 15. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed. No conviction shall work a corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate: Provided, That this provision shall not prohibit the imposition of pecuniary penalties.

SEC. 16. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it or in adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

SEC. 17. No person shall be prosecuted criminally in courts of record for felony or misdemeanor otherwise than by presentment or indictment or by information. No person shall be prosecuted for a felony by information without having had a preliminary examination before an examining magistrate, or having waived such preliminary examination. Prosecutions may be instituted in courts not of record upon a duly verified complaint.

SEC. 18. A grand jury shall be composed of twelve men, any nine of whom concurring may find an indictment or true bill. A grand jury shall be convened upon the order of a judge of a court having the power to try and determine felonies, upon his own motion; or such grand jury shall be ordered by such judge upon the filing of a petition therefor signed by one hundred resident taxpayers of the county; when so assembled such grand jury shall have power to investigate and return indictments for all character and grades of crime, and such other powers as the Legislature may prescribe: Provided, That the Legislature may make the calling of a grand jury compulsory.

SEC. 19. The right of trial by jury shall be and remain inviolate, and a jury for the trial of civil and criminal cases in courts of record, other than county courts, shall consist of twelve men; but, in county courts and courts not of record, a jury shall consist of six men. This section shall not be so construed as to prevent limitations being fixed by law upon the right of appeal from judgments of courts not of record in civil cases concerning causes of action involving less than twenty dollars. In civil cases, and in criminal cases less than felonies, three-fourths of the whole number of jurors concurring shall have power to render a verdict. In all other cases the entire number of jurors must concur to render a verdict. In case a verdict is rendered by less than the whole number of jurors, the verdict shall be in writing and signed by each juror concurring therein.

SEC. 20. In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the crime shall have been committed: Provided, That the venue may be changed to some other county of the State, on the application of the accused, in such manner as may be prescribed by law. He shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him and have a copy thereof, and be confronted with the witnesses against him, and have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses on his behalf. He shall have the right to be heard by himself and counsel; and in capital cases, at least two days before the case is called for trial, he shall be furnished with a list of the witnesses that will be called in chief, to prove the allegations of the indictment or information, together with their post-office addresses.

SEC. 21. No person shall be compelled to give evidence which will tend to incriminate him, except as in this Constitution specifically provided; nor shall any person, after having been once acquitted by a jury, be again put in jeopardy of life or liberty for that of which he has been acquitted. Nor shall any person be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the same offense.

SEC. 22. Every person may freely speak, write, or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libel, the truth of the matter alleged to be libelous may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous be true, and was written or published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted.

SEC. 23. No private property shall be taken or damaged for private use, with or without compensation, unless by consent of the owner, except for private ways of necessity, or for drains and ditches across lands of others for agricultural, mining, or sanitary purposes, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 24. Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Such compensation, irrespective of any benefit from any improvements proposed, shall be ascertained by a board of commissioners of not less than three free-holders, in such manner as may be prescribed by law. The commissioners shall not be appointed by any judge or court without reasonable notice having been served upon all parties in interest. The commissioners shall be selected from the regular jury list of names prepared and made as the Legislature shall provide. Any party aggrieved shall have the right of appeal, without bond, and trial by jury in a court of record. Until the compensation shall be paid to the owner, or into court for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed, or the proprietary rights of the owner divested. When possession is taken of property condemned for any public use, the owner shall be entitled to the immediate receipt of the compensation awarded, without prejudice to the right of either party to prosecute further proceedings for the judicial determination of the sufficiency or insufficiency of such compensation. The fee of land taken by common carriers for right of way, without the consent of the owner, shall remain in such owner subject only to the use for which it is taken. In all cases of condemnation of private property for public or private use, the determination of the character of the use shall be a judicial question.

SEC. 25. The Legislature shall pass laws defining contempts and regulating the proceedings and punishment in matters of contempt: Provided, That any person accused of violating or disobeying, when not in the presence or hearing of the court, or judge sitting as such, any order of injunction, or restraint, made or entered by any court or judge of the State shall, before penalty or punishment is imposed, be entitled to a trial by jury as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. In no case shall a penalty or punishment be imposed for contempt, until an opportunity to be heard is given.

SEC. 26. The right of a citizen to keep and bear arms in defense of his home, person, or property, or in aid of the civil power, when thereunto legally summoned, shall never be prohibited; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the Legislature from regulating the carrying of weapons.

SEC. 27. Any person having knowledge or possession of facts that tend to establish the guilt of any other person or corporation charged with an offense against the laws of the State, shall not be excused from giving testimony or producing evidence, when legally called upon so to do, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him under the laws of the State; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify or produce evidence.

SEC. 28. The records, books, and files of all corporations shall be, at all times, liable and subject to the full visitorial and inquisitorial powers of the State, notwithstanding the immunities and privileges in this Bill of Rights secured to the persons, inhabitants, and citizens thereof.

SEC. 29. No person shall be transported out of the State for any offense committed within the State, nor shall any person be transported out of the State for any purpose, without his consent, except by due process of law; but nothing in this provision shall prevent the operation of extradition laws, or the transporting of persons sentenced for crime, to other States for the purpose of incarceration.

SEC. 30. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches or seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, describing as particularly as may be the place to be searched and the person or thing to be seized.

SEC. 31. The right of the State to engage in any occupation or business for public purposes shall not be denied nor prohibited, except that the State shall not engage in agriculture for any other than educational and scientific purposes and for the support of its penal, charitable, and educational institutions.

SEC. 32. Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and shall never be allowed, nor shall the law of primogeniture or entailments ever be in force in this State.

SEC. 33. The enumeration in this Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny, impair, or disparage others retained by the people.

ARTICLE III.

SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. The qualified electors of the State shall be male citizens of the United States, male citizens of the State, and male persons of Indian descent native of the United States, who are over the age of twenty-one years, who have resided in the State one year, in the County six months, and in the election precinct thirty days, next preceding the election at which any such elector offers to vote: Provided, That no person adjudged guilty of a felony after the adoption of this Constitution, subject to such exceptions as the Legislature may prescribe, unless his citizenship shall have been restored in the manner provided by law; nor any person, while kept in a poorhouse or other asylum at the public expense, except Federal and Confederate ex-soldiers; nor any person in a public prison, nor any idiot or lunatic, shall be entitled to vote at any election under the laws of this State.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of voting, no member of the regular army or navy of the United States shall gain a residence in this State by reason of being stationed in this State, nor shall any such person lose a residence in the State while absent from the State in the military or naval service of the United States.

SEC. 3. Until otherwise provided by law, all female citizens of this State, possessing like qualifications of male electors, shall be qualified to vote at school district elections or meetings.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall enact laws creating an election board (not more than a majority of whose members shall be selected from the same political party), and shall provide the time and manner of holding and conducting all elections; and, at any time the Federal Constitution may permit the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, the Legislature shall provide for their election as for the election of Governor and other elective officers.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall enact laws providing for a mandatory primary system, which shall provide for the nomination of all candidates in all elections for State, District, County, and municipal officers, for all political parties, including United States Senators: Provided, however, This provision shall not exclude the right of the people to place on the ballot by petition any non-partisan candidate.

SEC. 6. In all elections by the people the vote shall be by ballot and the Legislature shall provide the kind of ticket or ballot to be used and make all such other regulations as may be necessary to detect and punish fraud, and preserve the purity of the ballot; and may, when necessary, provide by law for the registration of electors throughout the State or in any incorporated city or town thereof, and, when it is so provided, no person shall vote at any election unless he shall have registered according to law.

SEC. 7. The reservation of the powers of the initiative and referendum in this article shall not deprive the Legislature of the right to repeal any law, propose or pass any measure, which may be consistent with the Constitution of the State and the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 8. Laws shall be provided to prevent corruption in making, procuring, and submitting initiative and referendum petitions.

THE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.

SEC. 9. The Senate, except as hereinafter provided, shall consist of not more than forty-four members, whose term of office shall be four years: Provided, That one senator elected at the first election from each even numbered district shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the regular state election in nineteen hundred and eight, and one elected from each odd numbered district at said first election shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the day of the regular state election in nineteen hundred and ten: And provided further, That in districts electing two senators, the two elected at the first election shall cast lots in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe to determine which shall hold the long and which the short term.

SEC. 9. (a) At the time each senatorial appointment is made after the year nineteen hundred and ten the State shall be divided into forty-four districts, to be called senatorial districts, each of which shall elect one senator; and the Senate shall always be composed of forty-four senators, except that in event any county shall be entitled to three or more senators at the time of any appointment such additional senator or senators shall be given such county in addition to the forty-four senators and the whole number to that extent. Said districts shall be numbered from One to Forty-four inclusive, and each of said districts shall contain as near as may be an equal number of inhabitants, such population to be ascertained by the next preceding Federal census, or in such manner as the Legislature may direct, and shall be in as compact form as practicable and shall remain unaltered until the next decennial period, and shall at all times consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 9. (b) No county shall ever be divided in the formation of a Senatorial District except to make two or more senatorial districts wholly in such county. No town, and no ward in a city, when constituting only one voting precinct, shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, nor shall any senatorial district contain a greater excess in population over an adjoining district in the same county than the population of a town, or ward in a city, constituting only one voting precinct therein, adjoining such district. Towns, and wards in cities, constituting only one voting precinct, which may, from their location, be included in either of two senatorial districts, shall be so placed as to make such districts most nearly equal in number of inhabitants.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SEC. 10. The House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, shall consist of not more than one hundred and nine members who shall hold office for two years: Provided, That the representatives elected at the first election shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the day of the regular state election in nineteen hundred and eight: And provided, That the day on which state elections shall be held shall be fixed by the Legislature.

(a) The first Legislature shall meet at the seat of government upon proclamation of the Governor on the day named in said proclamation, which shall not be more than thirty days nor less than fifteen days after the admission of the State into the Union.

(b) The apportionment of this State for members of the Legislature shall be made at the first session of the Legislature after each decennial Federal census.

(c) The whole population of the State as ascertained by the Federal census, or in such manner as the Legislature may direct, shall be divided by the number one hundred and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives for the next ten years succeeding such apportionment.

(d) Every county having a population equal to one-half of said ratio shall be entitled to one representative; every county containing said ratio and three-fourths over shall be entitled to two representatives, and so on, requiring after the first two an entire ratio for each additional representative: Provided, That no county shall ever take part in the election of more than seven representatives.

(e) When any county shall have a fraction above the ratio so large that being multiplied by five the result will be equal to one or more ratios, additional representatives shall be apportioned for such ratio among the several sessions of the decennial period. If there are two ratios, representatives shall be allotted to the fourth and third sessions, respectively; if three, the third, second and first sessions, respectively; if four, to the fourth, third, second, and first sessions, respectively.

(f) Any county forming with another county or counties a representative district during one decennial period if it has acquired sufficient population, at a fixed decennial period, shall be entitled to an additional representative, if there shall be left in the district from which it shall have been separated a population sufficient for a representative. No such change shall be made except at the regular decennial period for the apportionment of representatives.

(g) If in fixing any decennial ratio, a county previously a separate representative district shall have less than the number required by the ratio for a representative, such county shall be attached to a county adjoining it and become a part of such representative district.

ARTICLE IV.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

SECTION 1. The powers of the government of the State of Oklahoma shall be divided into three separate departments: The Legislative, Executive, and Judicial; and except as provided in this Constitution, the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial departments of government shall be separate and distinct, and neither shall exercise the powers properly belonging to either of the others.

ARTICLE V.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

SECTON 1. The Legislative authority of the State shall be vested in a Legislature, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives; but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose laws and amendments to the Constitution and to enact or reject the same at the polls independent of the Legislature, and also reserve power at their own option to approve or reject at the polls any act of the Legislature.

SEC. 2. The first power reserved by the people is the initiative, and eight per centum of the legal voters shall have the right to propose any legislative measure, and fifteen per centum of the legal voters shall have the right to propose amendments to the Constitution by petition, and every such petition shall include the full text of the measure so proposed. The second power is the referendum, and it may be ordered (except as to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety), either by petition signed by five per centum of the legal voters or by the Legislature as other bills are enacted. The ratio and per centum of legal voters hereinbefore stated shall be based upon the total number of votes cast at the last general election for the State office receiving the highest number of votes at such election.

SEC. 3. Referendum petitions shall be filed with the Secretary of State not more than ninety days after the final adjournment of the session of the Legislature which passed the bill on which the referendum is demanded. The veto power of the Governor shall not extend to measures voted on by the people. All elections on measures referred to the people of the State shall be had at the next election held throughout the State, except when the Legislature or the Governor shall order a special election for the express purpose of making such reference. Any measure referred to the people by the initiative shall take effect and be in force when it shall have been approved by a majority of the votes cast in such election. Any measure referred to the people by the referendum shall take effect and be in force when it shall have been approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon and not otherwise.

The style of all bills shall be: "Be It Enacted By the People of the State of Oklahoma."

Petitions and orders for the initiative and for the referendum shall be filed with the Secretary of State and addressed to the Governor of the State, who shall submit the same to the people. The Legislature shall make suitable provisions for carrying into effect the provisions of this article.

SEC. 4. The referendum may be demanded by the people against one or more items, sections, or parts of any act of the Legislature in the same manner in which such power may be exercised against a complete act. The filing of a referendum petition against one or more items, sections, or parts of an act shall not delay the remainder of such act from becoming operative.

SEC. 5. The powers of the initiative and referendum reserved to the people by this Constitution for the State at large, are hereby further reserved to the legal voters of every county and district therein, as to all local legislation, or action, in the administration of county and district government in and for their respective counties and districts.

The manner of exercising said powers shall be prescribed by general laws, except that Boards of County Commissioners may provide for the time of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to local legislation in their respective counties and districts.

The requisite number of petitioners for the invocation of the initiative and referendum in counties and districts shall bear twice, or double, the ratio to the whole number of legal voters in such county or district, as herein provided therefor in the State at large.

SEC. 6. Any measure rejected by the people, through the powers of the initiative and referendum, can not be again proposed by the initiative within three years thereafter by less than twenty-five per centum of the legal voters.

SEC. 7. The reservation of the powers of the initiative and referendum in this article shall not deprive the Legislature of the right to repeal any law, propose or pass any measure, which may be consistent with the Constitution of the State and the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 8. Laws shall be provided to prevent corruption in making, procuring, and submitting initiative and referendum petitions.

THE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.

SEC. 9. The Senate, except as hereinafter provided, shall consist of not more than forty-four members, whose term of office shall be four years: Provided, That one senator elected at the first election from each even numbered district shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the regular state election in nineteen hundred and eight, and one elected from each odd numbered district at said first election shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the day of the regular state election in nineteen hundred and ten: And provided further, That in districts electing two senators, the two elected at the first election shall cast lots in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe to determine which shall hold the long and which the short term.

SEC. 9. (a) At the time each senatorial appointment is made after the year nineteen hundred and ten the State shall be divided into forty-four districts, to be called senatorial districts, each of which shall elect one senator; and the Senate shall always be composed of forty-four senators, except that in event any county shall be entitled to three or more senators at the time of any appointment such additional senator or senators shall be given such county in addition to the forty-four senators and the whole number to that extent. Said districts shall be numbered from One to Forty-four inclusive, and each of said districts shall contain as near as may be an equal number of inhabitants, such population to be ascertained by the next preceding Federal census, or in such manner as the Legislature may direct, and shall be in as compact form as practicable and shall remain unaltered until the next decennial period, and shall at all times consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 9. (b) No county shall ever be divided in the formation of a Senatorial District except to make two or more senatorial districts wholly in such county. No town, and no ward in a city, when constituting only one voting precinct, shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, nor shall any senatorial district contain a greater excess in population over an adjoining district in the same county than the population of a town, or ward in a city, constituting only one voting precinct therein, adjoining such district. Towns, and wards in cities, constituting only one voting precinct, which may, from their location, be included in either of two senatorial districts, shall be so placed as to make such districts most nearly equal in number of inhabitants.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SEC. 10. The House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, shall consist of not more than one hundred and nine members who shall hold office for two years: Provided, That the representatives elected at the first election shall hold office until the fifteenth day succeeding the day of the regular state election in nineteen hundred and eight: And provided, That the day on which state elections shall be held shall be fixed by the Legislature.

(a) The first Legislature shall meet at the seat of government upon proclamation of the Governor on the day named in said proclamation, which shall not be more than thirty days nor less than fifteen days after the admission of the State into the Union.

In case of a vacancy in said office, the Governor of the State shall fill such vacancy by appointment until the next general election, when a successor shall be elected to fill out any unexpired term.

SEC. 16. The qualifications of such commissioners shall be as follows: to be resident citizens of this State for over two years next preceding the election, and qualified voters under the Constitution and laws, and not less than thirty years of age; nor shall such commissioners, or either of them, be, directly or indirectly, interested in any railroad, street railway, traction line, canal, steamboat, pipe line, car line, sleeping car line, car association, express line, telephone or telegraph line, operated for hire, in this State, or out of it, or any stock, bond, mortgage, security, or earnings of any such railroad, street railway, traction line, canal, steamboat, pipe line, car line, sleeping car line, car association, express line, telephone or telegraph line, compress or elevator companies; and if such Commissioner shall voluntarily become so interested, his office shall become vacant; and if any Corporation Commissioner shall become so interested otherwise than voluntarily, he shall, within a reasonable time, divest himself of such interest; and failing to do this, his office shall become vacant. Nor shall any such commissioner hold any other office under the Government of the United States, or of this State or any other State government, and shall not, while such Commissioner, engage in any occupation or business inconsistent with his duties as such commissioner.

SEC. 17. Before entering upon the duties of his office, each of said commissioners shall take and subscribe to the oath of office as prescribed in this Constitution and shall, in addition thereto, swear that he is not, directly or indirectly, interested in any railroad, street railway, traction line, canal, steamboat, pipe line, car line, sleeping car line, car association, express line, telephone or telegraph line, nor in the bonds, stocks, mortgages, securities, contract or earnings of any railroad, street railway, traction line, canal, steamboat, pipe line, car line, sleeping car line, car association, express line, telephone or telegraph line; and that he will, to the best of his ability, faithfully and justly execute and enforce the provisions of this Constitution, and all the laws of this State concerning railroads, street railways, traction lines, canals, steamboats, pipe lines, car lines, sleeping car lines, car associations, express lines, telephone and telegraph lines, compress and elevator companies, and all other corporations over which said Commission has jurisdiction, which oath shall be filed with the Secretary of State.

SEC. 18. The Commission shall have the power and authority and be charged with the duty of supervising, regulating, and controlling all transportation and transmission companies doing business in this State, in all matters relating to the performance of their public duties and their charges therefor, and of correcting abuses and preventing unjust discrimination and extortion by such companies; and to that end the Commission shall, from time to time, prescribe and enforce against such companies, in the manner hereinafter authorized, such rates, charges, classifications of traffic, and rules and regulations, and shall require them to establish and maintain all such public service, facilities, and conveniences as may be reasonable and just, which said rates, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and requirements, the Commission may, from time to time, alter or amend. All rates, charges, classifications, rules and regulations adopted, or acted upon, by any such company, inconsistent with those prescribed by the Commission, within the scope of its authority, shall be unlawful and void. The Commission shall also have the right, at all times, to inspect the books and papers of all transportation and transmission companies doing business in this State, and to require from such companies, from time to time, special reports and statements, under oath, concerning their business; it shall keep itself fully informed of the physical condition of all the railroads of the State, as to the manner in which they are operated, with reference to the security and accommodation of the public, and shall, from time to time, make and enforce such requirements, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to prevent unjust or unreasonable discrimination and extortion by any transportation or transmission company in favor of, or against any person, locality, community, connecting line, or kind of traffic, in the matter of car service, train or boat schedule, efficiency of transportation, or transmission, or otherwise, in connection with the public duties of such company. Before the Commission shall prescribe or fix any rate, charge or classification of traffic, and before it shall make any order, rule, regulation, or requirement directed against any one or more companies by name, the company or companies to be affected by such rate, charge, classification, order, rule, regulation, or requirement, shall first be given, by the Commission, at least ten days' notice of the time and place when and where the contemplated action in the premises will be considered and disposed of, and shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to introduce evidence and to be heard thereon, to the end that justice may be done, and shall have process to enforce the attendance of witnesses; and before said Commission shall make or prescribe any general order, rule, regulation, or requirement, not directed against any specific company or companies by name, the contemplated general order, rule, regulation, or requirement shall first be published in substance, not less than once a week, for four consecutive weeks, in one or more of the newspapers of general circulation published in the county in which the capitol of this State may be located, together with the notice of the time and place, when and where the Commission will hear any objections which may be urged by any person interested, against the proposed order, rule, regulation, or requirement; and every such general order, rule, regulation, or requirement, made by the Commission, shall be published at length, for the time and in the manner above specified, before it shall go into effect, and shall also, so long as it remains in force, be published in each subsequent annual report of the Commission. The authority of the Commission (subject to review on appeal as hereinafter provided) to prescribe rates, charges, and classifications of traffic, for transportation and transmission companies, shall, subject to regulation by law, be paramount; but its authority to prescribe any other rules, regulations or requirements for corporations or other persons shall be subject to the superior authority of the Legislature to legislate thereon by general laws: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall impair the rights which have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, conferred by law upon the authorities of any city, town, or county to prescribe rules, regulations, or rates of charges to be observed by any public-service corporation in connection with any services performed by it under a municipal or county franchise granted by such city, town, or county, so far as such services may be wholly within the limits of the city, town, or county granting the franchise. Upon the request of the parties interested, it shall be the duty of the Commission, as far as possible, to effect, by mediation, the adjustment of claims, and the settlement of controversies, between transportation or transmission companies and their patrons or employees.

SEC. 18*a*. The Corporation Commission shall organize by electing one of its members chairman and appointing a secretary, whose salary shall be fixed by the Legislature. A majority of said commission shall constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of the majority of said Commission shall be necessary to decide any question.

SEC. 18*b*. As used in this article the term "Company" shall include associations and joint stock companies having any power or privileges not possessed by individuals, and include all corporations except municipal corporations and public institutions owned or controlled by the State.

SEC. 19. In all matters pertaining to the public visitation, regulation, or control of corporations, and within the jurisdiction of the Commission, it shall have the powers and authority of a court of record, to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses, and the p roduction of papers, to punish for contempt any person guilty of disrespectful or disorderly conduct in the presence of the Commission while in session, and to enforce compliance with any of its lawful orders or requirements by adjudging, and by enforcing its own appropriate process, against the delinquent or offending party or company (after it shall have been first duly cited, proceeded against by due process of law before the Commission sitting as a court, and afforded opportunity to introduce evidence and to be heard, as well as against the validity, justness, or unreasonableness of the order or requirement alleged to have been violated, as against the liability of the company for the alleged violation), such fines or other penalties as may be prescribed or authorized by this Constitution or by law. The Commission may be vested with such additional powers, and charged with such other duties (not inconsistent with this Constitution) as may be prescribed by law, in connection with the visitation, regulation, or control of corporations, or with the prescribing and enforcing of rates and charges to be observed in the conduct of any business where the State has the right to prescribe the rates and charges in connection therewith, or with the assessment of the property of corporations, or the appraisement of their franchises, for taxation, or with the investigation of the subject of taxation generally. Any corporation failing or refusing to obey any valid order or requirement of the Commission, within reasonable time, not less than ten days, as shall be fixed in the order, may be fined by the Commission (proceeding by due process of law as aforesaid) such sum, not exceeding five hundred dollars, as the Commission may deem proper, or such sum, in excess of five hundred dollars, as may be prescribed or authorized by law; and each day's continuance of such failure or refusal, after due service upon such corporation of the order or requirement of the Commission shall be a separate offense: Provided, That should the operation of such order or requirement be suspended, pending any appeal therefrom, the period of such suspension shall not be computed against the company in the matter of its liability to fines or penalities.

SEC. 20. From any action of the Commission prescribing rates, charges, or classifications of traffic, or affecting the train schedule of any transportation company, or requiring additional facilities, conveniences, or public service of any transportation or transmission company, or refusing to approve a suspending bond, or requiring additional security thereon or an increase thereof, as hereinafter provided for, an appeal (subject to such reasonable limitations as to time, regulations as to procedure and provisions as to cost, as may be prescribed by law) may be taken by the corporation whose rates, charges, or classifications of traffic, schedule, facilities, conveniences, or service, are affected, or by any person deeming himself aggrieved by such action, or (if allowed by law) by the State. Until otherwise provided by law, such appeal shall be taken in the manner in which appeals may be taken to the Supreme Court from the District Courts, except that such an appeal shall be of right, and the Supreme Court may provide by rule for proceedings in the matter of appeals in any particular in which the existing rules of law are inapplicable. If such appeal be taken by the corporation whose rates, charges, or classifications of traffic, schedules, facilities, conveniences, or service are affected, the State shall be made the appellee; but, in the other cases mentioned, the corporation so affected shall be made the appellee. The Legislature may also, by general laws, provide for appeals from any other action of the Commission, by the State, or by any person interested, irrespective of the amount involved. All appeals from the Commission shall be to the Supreme Court only, and in all appeals to which the State is a party, it shall be represented by the Attorney-General or his appointed representative. No court of this State (except the Supreme Court, by way of appeals as herein authorized) shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct, or annul any action of the Commission within the scope of its authority, or to suspend or delay the execution or operation thereof, or to enjoin, restrain, or interfere with the Commission in the performance of its official duties: Provided, however, That the writs of mandamus and prohibition shall lie from the Supreme Court to the Commission in all cases where such writs, respectively, would lie to any inferior court or officer.

SEC. 21. Upon the granting of an appeal, a writ of supersedeas may be awarded by the Supreme Court, suspending the operation of the action appealed from until the final disposition of the appeal; but, prior to the final reversal thereof by the Supreme Court, no action of the Commission prescribing or affecting the rates, charges, or classifications of traffic of any transportation or transmission company shall be delayed, or suspended, in its operation, by reason of any appeal by such corporation, or by reason of any proceeding resulting from such appeal, until a suspending bond shall first have been executed and filed with, and approved by the Commission (or approved, on review, by the Supreme Court), payable to the State, and sufficient in amount and security to insure the prompt refunding, by the appealing corporation to the parties entitled thereto, of all charges which such company may collect or receive, pending the appeal, in excess of those fixed, or authorized, by the final decision of the Court on appeal. The Commission, upon the execution of such bond, shall forthwith require the appealing company, under penalty of the immediate enforcement (pending the appeal and notwithstanding any supersedeas), of the order or requirement appealed from, to keep such accounts, and to make to the Commission, from time to time, such reports, verified by oath, as may, in the judgment of the Commission, suffice to show the amounts being charged or received by the company, pending the appeal, in excess of the charge allowed by the action of the Commission appealed from, together with the names and addresses of the persons to whom such overcharges will be refundable in case the charges made by the company, pending the appeal, be not sustained on such appeal; and the Commission shall also, from time to time, require such company, under like penalty, to give additional security on, or to increase the said suspending bond, whenever, in the opinion of the Commission, the same may be necessary to insure the prompt refunding of the overcharges aforesaid. Upon the final decision of such appeal, all amounts which the appealing company may have collected, pending the appeal, in excess of that authorized by such final decision, shall be promptly refunded by the company to the parties entitled thereto, in such manner and through such methods of distribution as may be prescribed by the Commission, or by law. All such appeals, affecting rates, charges, or classifications of traffic, shall have precedence upon the docket of the Supreme Court, and shall be heard and disposed of promptly by the court, irrespective of its place of session, next after the habeas corpus and State cases already on the docket of the court.

SEC. 22. In no case of appeal from the Commission, shall any new or additional evidence be introduced in the Supreme Court; but the chairman of the Commission, under the seal of the Commission, shall certify to the Supreme Court all the facts upon which the action appealed from was based and which may be essential for the proper decision of the appeal, together with such of the evidence introduced before, or considered by, the Commission as may be selected, specified, and required to be certified, by any party in interest, as well as such other evidence, so introduced or considered as the Commission may deem proper to certify. The Commission shall, whenever an appeal is taken therefrom, file with the record of the case, and as a part thereof, a written statement of the reasons upon which the action appealed from was based, and such statement shall be read and considered by the Supreme Court, upon disposing of the appeal. The Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction, on such appeal, to consider and determine the reasonableness and justness of the action of the Commission appealed from, as well as any other matter arising under such appeal: Provided, however, That the action of the Commission appealed from shall be regarded as prima facie just, reasonable, and correct; but the court may, when it deems necessary, in the interest of justice, remand to the Commission any case pending on appeal, and require the same to be further investigated by the Commission, and reported upon to the court (together with a certificate of such additional evidence as may be tendered before the Commission by any party in interest), before the appeal is finally decided.

SEC. 23. Whenever the court, upon appeal, shall reverse an order of the Commission affecting the rates, charges, or the classifications of traffic of any transportation or transmission company, it shall, at the same time, substitute therefor such orders as, in its opinion, the Commission should have made at the time of entering the order appealed from; otherwise the reversal order shall not be valid. Such substituted order shall have the same force and effect (and none other) as if it had been entered by the Commission at the time the original order appealed from was entered. The right of the Commission to prescribe and enforce rates, charges, classifications, rules and regulations affecting any or all actions of the Commission theretofore entered by it and appealed from, but based upon circumstances or conditions different from those existing at the time the order appealed from was made, shall not be suspended or impaired by reason of the pendency of such appeal; but no order of the Commission, prescribing or altering such rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations, shall be retroactive.

SEC. 24. The right of any person to institute and prosecute in the ordinary courts of justice, any action, suit, or motion against any transportation or transmission company, for any claim or cause of action against such company, shall not be extinguished or impaired, by reason of any fine or other penalty which the Commission may impose, or be authorized to impose, upon such company because of its breach of any public duty, or because of its failure to comply with any order or requirement of the Commission; but, in no such proceeding by any person against such corporation, nor in any collateral proceedings shall the reasonableness, justness, or validity of any rate, charge, classification of traffic, rule, regulation, or requirement, theretofore prescribed by the Commission, within the scope of its authority, and then in force, be questioned: Provided, however, That no case based upon or involving any order of the Commission shall be heard or disposed of, against the objection of either party, so long as such order is suspended in its operation by an order of the Supreme Court as authorized by this Constitution or by any law passed in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 25. The Commission shall make annual reports to the Governor of its proceedings, in which reports it shall recommend, from time to time, such new or additional legislation in reference to its powers or duties, or the creation, supervision, regulation, or control of corporations, or to the subject of taxation, as it may deem wise or expedient, or as may be required by law.

SEC. 26. It shall be the duty of each and every railway company, subject to the provisions herein, to provide and maintain adequate, comfortable, and clean depots, and depot buildings, at its several stations, for the accommodation of passengers, and said depot buildings shall be kept well lighted and warmed for the comfort and accommodation of the traveling public; and all such roads shall keep and maintain adequate and suitable freight depots and buildings for the receiving, handling, storing, and delivering of all freight handled by such roads.

SEC. 27. In case any railroad company shall hereafter seek to cross at grade with its track or tracks, the track or tracks of another railroad, the railroad seeking to cross at grade, within a reasonable time, shall be compelled to interlock or protect such crossings by safety devices, to be designated by the Commission, and all costs of appliance, together with the expenses of putting them in, shall be borne equally by each company: Provided, That this act shall not apply to crossings of sidetracks.

SEC. 28. The commissioners, or either of them, or such persons as they may employ therefor, shall have the right, at such times as they may deem necessary, to inspect the books and papers of any railroad company or other public service corporation, and to examine, under oath, any officer, agent, or employee of such corporations in relation to the business and affairs of the same. If any railroad company or other public service corporation shall refuse to permit the commissioners, or either of them, or any person authorized thereto, to examine its books and papers, such railroad company or other public service corporation shall, until otherwise provided by law, for each offense, pay to the State of Oklahoma not less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, for each day it shall so fail or refuse, and the officer or other person so refusing shall be punished as the law shall prescribe.

SEC. 29. The Commission shall ascertain, and enter of record, the same to be a public record, as early as practicable, the amount of money expended in construction and equipment per mile of every railroad and other public service corporation in Oklahoma, the amount of money expended to procure the right of way, and the amount of money it would require to reconstruct the roadbed, track, depots, and transportation facilities, and to replace all the physical properties belonging to the railroad or other public service corporation. It shall also ascertain the outstanding bonds, debentures, and indebtedness, and the amount, respectively, thereof, when issued, and rate of interest, when due, for what purposes issued, how used, to whom issued, to whom sold, and the price in cash, property, or labor, if any, received therefor, what became of the proceeds, by whom the indebtedness is held, the amount purporting to be due thereon, the floating indebtedness of the company, to whom due, and his address, the credits due on it, the property on hand belonging to the railroad company or other public service corporation, and the judicial or other sales of said road, its property or franchises, and the amounts purporting to have been paid, and in what manner paid therefor. The Commission shall also ascertain the amounts paid for salaries to the officers of the railroad, or other public service corporation, and the wages paid its employees. For the purpose in this section named, the Commission may employ experts to assist them when needed, and from time to time, as the information required by this section is obtained, it shall communicate the same to the Attorney-General by report, and file a duplicate thereof with the State Examiner and inspector for public use, and said information shall be printed, from time to time, in the annual report of the Commission.

SEC. 30. No transportation or transmission company shall charge or receive any greater compensation, in the aggregate, for transporting the same class of passengers or property, or for transmitting the same class of messages over a shorter than a longer distance, along the same line and in the same direction—the shorter being included in the longer distance; but this section shall not be construed as authorizing any such company to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance. The Commission may, from time to time, authorize any such company to disregard the foregoing provisions of this section, by charging such rates as the Commission may prescribe as just and equitable between such company and the public, to or from any junctional or competitive points or localities, or where the competition of points located without this State may make necessary the prescribing of special rates for the protection of the commerce of this State; but this section shall not apply to mileage tickets, or to any special excursion, or commutation rates, or to special rates for services rendered to this State, or to the United States, or in the interest of some public object, when such tickets or rates shall have been prescribed or authorized by the Commission.

SEC. 31. No railroad, oil pipe line, telephone, telegraph, express or car corporation organized under the laws of any other State, or of the United States, and doing business, or proposing to do business in this State, shall be entitled to the benefit of the right of eminent domain in this State until it shall have become a body corporate pursuant to or in accordance with the laws of this State.

SEC. 32. The said Commission shall have power, and it is hereby made its duty, to investigate all through freight or passenger rates on railroads in this State, and when the same are, in the opinion of the Commission, excessive or levied or laid in violation of the interstate commerce law, or the rules and regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the proper officials of the railroads are to be notified of the facts and requested to reduce them or make the proper corrections, as the case may be. When the rates are not changed, or the proper corrections are not made according to the request of the Commission, it shall be the duty of the latter to notify the Interstate Commerce Commission and to make proper application to it for relief, and the Attorney-General or such other persons as may be designated by law shall represent the Commission in all such matters.

SEC. 33. Any person, firm, or corporation owning or operating any coal, lead, iron, or zinc mine, or any saw mill, grain elevator, or other industry, whenever the Commission shall reasonably determine that the amount of business is sufficient to justify the same, near or within a reasonable distance of any track, may, at the expense of such person, firms, or corporation build and keep in repair a switch leading from such railroad to such mine, saw mill, elevator or other industry; such railroad company shall be required to furnish the switch stand and frog and other necessary material for making connection with such side-track or spur under such reasonable terms, conditions and regulations as the said Commission may prescribe, and shall make connection therewith. The party owning such line, saw mill, elevator or other industry shall pay the actual cost thereof. If any railroad company, after proper demand therefor is made, shall refuse to furnish said material for making said connection and put the same in place, or after the building of such switch, shall fail or refuse to operate the same, such railroad company failing and refusing for a reasonable time, shall forfeit and pay to the party or corporation aggrieved, the sum of five hundred dollars for each and every offense, to be recovered by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction; and every day of such refusal on the part of the railroad company to operate such switch as aforesaid, after such demand is made, shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 34. As used in this article, the term "transportation company" shall include any company, corporation, trustee, receiver, or any other person owning, leasing, or operating for hire, a railroad, street railway, canal, steamboat line, and also any freight-car company, car association, express company, sleeping-car company, car corporation, or company, trustee, or person in any way engaged in such business as a common carrier over a route acquired in whole or in part under the right of eminent domain, or under any grant from the Government of the United States; the term "rate" shall be construed to mean rate of charge for any service rendered, or to be rendered; the terms "rate," "charge," and "regulation," shall include joint rates, joint charges, and joint regulations, respectively; the term "transmission company" shall include any company, receiver or other person, owning, leasing, or operating for hire any telegraph or telephone line; the term "freight" shall be construed to mean any property transported or received for transportation, by any transportation company. The term "public-service corporation" shall include all transportation and transmission companies, all gas, electric light, heat and power companies, and all persons authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, or to use or occupy any right of way, street, alley, or public highway, whether along, over, or under the same, in a manner not permitted to the general public; the term "person" as used in this article, shall include individuals, partnerships and corporations, in the singular as well as plural number; the term "bond" shall mean all certificates or written evidences of indebtedness issued by any corporation and secured by mortgage or trust deed. The term "frank" shall mean any writing or token issued by or under authority of a transmission company, entitling the holder to any service from such company free of charge.

The provisions of this article shall always be so restricted in their application as not to conflict with any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and as if the necessary limitations upon their interpretation had been herein expressed in each case.

SEC. 35. After the second Monday in January, nineteen hundred and nine, the Legislature may, by law, from time to time, alter, amend, revise, or repeal sections from eighteen to thirty-four, inclusive, of this article, or any of them, or any amendments thereof: Provided, That no amendment made under authority of this section shall contravene the provisions of any part of this Constitution other than the said sections last above referred to or any such amendments thereof.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

SEC. 36. The common law doctrine of the fellow-servant, so far as it affects the liability of the master for injuries to his servant, resulting from the acts or omissions of any other servant or servants of the common master, is abrogated as to every employee of every railroad company and every street railway company or interurban railway company, and of every person, firm, or corporation engaged in mining in this State; and every such employee shall have the same right to recover for every injury suffered by him for the acts or omissions of any other employee or employees of the common master that a servant would have if such acts or omissions were those of the master himself in the performance of a nonassignable duty; and when death, whether instantaneous or not, results to such employee from any injury for which he could have recovered under the above provisions, had not death occurred, then his legal or personal representative, surviving consort or relatives, or any trustee, curator, committee or guardian of such consort or relatives, shall have the same rights and remedies with respect thereto, as if death had been caused by the negligence of the master. And every railroad company and every street railway company or interurban railway company, and every person, firm, or corporation engaged in underground mining in this State shall be liable under this section, for the acts of his or its receivers.

Nothing contained in this section shall restrict the power of the Legislature to extend to the employees of any person, firm, or corporation, the rights and remedies herein provided for.

PASSENGER FARE.

SEC. 37. No person, company, or corporation, receiver, or other agency, operating a railroad, other than street railroad or electric railroad, in whole or in part, within this State, shall demand or receive for first-class transportation for each passenger, between points within this State on the portion of its road operated within this State, more than two cents per mile, until otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, The Corporation Commission shall have the power to exempt any railroad from the operation of this section upon satisfactory proof that it cannot earn a just compensation for the services rendered by it to the public, if not permitted to charge more than two cents per mile for the transportation of passengers within the State.

PRIVATE CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 38. No private corporation shall be created nor foreign corporation licensed to conduct business in the State, except by general law.

SEC. 39. No corporation shall issue stock except for money, labor done, or property actually received to the amount of the par value thereof, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void, and the Legislature shall prescribe the necessary regulations to prevent the issue of fictitious stock or indebtedness. The stock and bonded indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting to be held after thirty days' notice given in pursuance of law.

SEC. 40. No corporation organized or doing business in this State shall be permitted to influence elections or official duty by contributions of money or anything of value.

SEC. 41. No corporation chartered or licensed to do business in this State shall own, hold, or control, in any manner whatever, the stock of any competitive corporation or corporations engaged in the same kind of business, in or out of the State, except such stock as may be pledged in good faith to secure bona fide indebtedness acquired upon foreclosure, execution sale, or otherwise for the satisfaction of debt. In all cases where any corporation acquires stock in any other corporation, as herein provided, it shall be required to dispose of the same within twelve months from the date of acquisition; and during the period of its ownership of such stock it shall have no right to participate in the control of such corporation, except when permitted by order of the Corporation Commission. No trust company, or bank or banking company shall own, hold, or control, in any manner whatever, the stock of any other trust company, or bank or banking company, except such stock as may be pledged in good faith to secure bona fide indebtedness, acquired upon foreclosure, execution sale, or otherwise for the satisfaction of debt; and such stock shall be disposed of in the time and manner hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 42. Every license issued or charter granted to a mining or public service corporation, foreign or domestic, shall contain a stipulation that such corporation will submit any difference it may have with employees in reference to labor, to arbitration, as shall be provided by law.

SEC. 43. No corporation, foreign or domestic, shall be permitted to do business in this State without first filing in the office of the Corporation Commission a list of its stockholders, officers, and directors, with the residence and post-office address of, and the amount of stock held by each. And every foreign corporation shall, before being licensed to do business in the State, designate an agent residing in the State; and service of summons or legal notice may be had on such designated agent and such other agents as now are or may hereafter be provided for by law. Suit may be maintained against a foreign corporation in the county where an agent of such corporations may be found, or in the county of the residence of plaintiff, or in the county where the cause of action may arise.

SEC. 44. No foreign corporation shall be authorized to carry on in this State any business which a domestic corporation is prohibited from doing, or be relieved from compliance with any of the requirements made of a similar domestic corporation by the Constitution or laws of the State. Nothing in this article, however, shall restrict or limit the power of the Legislature to impose conditions under which foreign corporations may be licensed to do business in this State.

SEC. 45. Until otherwise provided by law, no person, firm, association, or corporation engaged in the production, manufacture, distribution, or sale of any commodity of general use, shall, for the purpose of creating a monopoly or destroying competition in trade, discriminate between different persons, associations, or corporations, or different sections, communities, or cities of the State, by selling such commodity at a lower rate in one section, community, or city than in another, after making due allowance for the difference, if any, in the grade, quantity, or quality, and in the actual cost of transportation from the point of production or manufacture.

SEC. 46. All existing charters or grants of special or exclusive privileges under which a bona fide organization shall not have taken place and business commenced in good faith at the time this Constitution becomes effective, shall thereafter have no validity.

SEC. 47. The Legislature shall have power to alter, amend, annul, revoke, or repeal any charter of incorporation or franchise now existing and subject to be altered, amended, annulled, revoked, or repealed at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, or any that may be hereafter created, whenever in its opinion it may be injurious to the citizens of this State, in such manner, however, that no injustice shall be done to the incorporators.

SEC. 48. The Legislature shall provide such penalties and regulations as may be necessary for the proper enforcement of the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE X.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

SECTION 1. The fiscal year shall commence on the first day of July in each year, unless otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide by law for an annual tax sufficient, with other resources, to defray the estimated ordinary expenses of the State for each fiscal year.

SEC. 3. Whenever the expenses of any fiscal year shall exceed the income, the Legislature may provide for levying a tax for the ensuing fiscal year, which, with other resources, shall be sufficient to pay the deficiency, as well as the estimated ordinary expenses of the State for the ensuing year.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of paying the State debt, if any, the Legislature shall provide for levying a tax, annually, sufficient to pay the annual interest and principal of such debt, within twenty-five years from the final passage of the law creating the debt.

SEC. 5. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended, or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects.

SEC. 6. All property used for free public libraries, free museums, public cemeteries, property used exclusively for schools, colleges, and all property used exclusively for religious and charitable purposes, and all property of the United States, and of this State, and of counties and of municipalities of this State; household goods of the heads of families, tools, implements, and live stock employed in the support of the family, not exceeding one hundred dollars in value, and all growing crops, shall be exempt from taxation: Provided, That all property not herein specified now exempt from taxation under the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma, shall be exempt from taxation until otherwise provided by law: And provided further, That there shall be exempt from taxation to all ex-Union and ex-Confederate soldiers, bona fide residents of this State, and to all widows of ex-Union and ex-Confederate soldiers, who are heads of families and bona fide residents of this State, personal property not exceeding two hundred dollars in value.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The amendment offered asking that $225,000 be appropriated to pay the expenses of holding the election for the constitutional delegates in the new State of Oklahoma and to pay the expenses and per diem of the delegates for writing the constitution and the subsequent election for the adoption or rejection of the constitution as well as for State officers was offered by me for the purpose of presenting to the representatives of the Government of the United States the question that the appropriation of $100,000 made by Congress when the enabling act was passed was insufficient to meet the expenses incident to and necessary to holding the elections and writing the constitution for the new State of Oklahoma, and I believe that when this question is properly understood that the representatives of the Government of the United States will have no hesitancy in making the appropriation as requested in my amendment.

When the enabling act was being considered by Congress it was impossible to ascertain definitely what amount would be required to pay the expenses, but I believe that it was the intention of Congress when they appropriated the $100,000 to appropriate a sufficient amount to pay all the expenses incident to a full and complete organization of the new State of Oklahoma. Acting upon that belief, the amendment under discussion was introduced by me. Some gentleman has asked the question whether this amendment was before the committee. This question was before the committee of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and I am reliably informed that a similar provision to the amendment offered here was passed by the Senate, but for some cause failed in the House. There can be no just reason for not adopting this amendment upon the appropriation bill now being considered if the cause for which it is asked is proper and right. Gentlemen upon the floor of this House can not deny that this is an emergency appropriation if they should hold that the Government should make the appropriation to meet the unpaid expenses of the organization of the new State of Oklahoma.

This is no new question arising in Congress and is not without precedent. The last three States admitted into the Union prior to the admission of the State of Oklahoma were given appropriations to meet the expenses of writing their constitutions and organizing into States. If these States were entitled to have the appropriation made, then I say, Why not give it to Oklahoma? Oklahoma, it is true, is in the West; the other three States in the Northwest, but should gentlemen who are Members of the grandest lawmaking power in the world hesitate and refuse to do that which is right between their sovereign States because of geographical location or political affiliation? I ask the gentlemen who are on the majority side of this House if any question was raised when the appropriation of $100,000 was incorporated into the enabling act as to the amount of the appropriation. I ask them if any question was raised as to the appropriation in the same enabling act that gave Oklahoma her right to come into the Union when an appropriation of $150,000 was made for Arizona and New Mexico. If there was none at that time, then I ask you, Why should any question be raised after the State has been admitted into the Union and its political status established as one of the sister States? Is it because the gentlemen believe the amount is in excess of what has heretofore been appropriated for the organization of States? If so, I desire to call your attention to the conditions that existed in Oklahoma as contradistinguished from those of other States that have heretofore been admitted into the Union.

Since the admission of the original thirteen colonies into the Union no State has been admitted that had not theretofore had at least some kind of a Territorial organization, and no State or the territory embraced within the State has ever had such conditions of property holding, of citizenship, and disorganization as did the Territories now embraced within the State of Oklahoma. For almost a century prior to the admission of Oklahoma the greater portion of the lands now embraced in the State of Oklahoma were held and occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians and other reservated tribes.

The title to the lands were vested in these respective tribes with the Government of the United States acting as their trustee. In 1889 certain tribes of Indians, by treaty with the Government of the United States, ceded to the United States a portion of what was Oklahoma Territory, and the Territory of Oklahoma was then organized as one of the Territories of the United States. Oklahoma Territory has since that time had a Delegate to represent it upon the floor of the House of Representatives. The territory embraced in the State of Oklahoma that was commonly known as the Indian Territory has never had a Delegate upon the floor of the House to represent its people. Prior to the passage of the enabling act treaties between the Government of the United States and the various tribes of Indians residing in that portion of what is now Oklahoma that was commonly known as the Indian Territory had been entered into and through the representatives of the Government of the United States the lands, or a greater part of them, have been allotted to the respective tribes. This was the condition when the enabling act was passed, providing for the creation of an election board to lay out the territories of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into constitutional districts in order that delegates might be elected to write a constitution for the new State. After the passage of the enabling act the election board was created, composed of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and two of the Federal judges occupying the Federal bench in the territory now comprising the State of Oklahoma, the three members of the election board each being an appointee of the Federal Government and representing the majority political party. The districts were laid out by these gentlemen, and fairly, too, as God gave them the light to see it; the election was held and the delegates elected to write the constitution, which I have presented here and which has been incorporated into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

When these delegates, elected to write the constitution of the new State of Oklahoma, assembled to perform that duty, I say that no delegation ever before in the history of these United States since the admission of the original thirteen colonies ever assembled to perform a more difficult task than did the delegates who assembled to write the constitution for the State of Oklahoma, and never was a task more nobly performed than was performed by the constitutional convention of the State of Oklahoma. They worked faithfully and earnestly to incorporate into their constitution provisions upon which a code of laws might be written for the protection of all alike, trying in every way to so draft the constitution that the man in everyday walks of life might understand its provisions and that the questions might not be continually arising in court as to whether or not certain things were constitutional or unconstitutional. These delegates soon learned that the appropriation was not sufficient to pay them for their time and expenses, and an appeal was made to the Congress of the United States at the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress for an increased appropriation to meet the necessary and actual expenses. The appeal was heard, but not granted; but I thank God that in that convention there were men who had sufficient patriotism and love of country to continue that work and to spend their own time and pay their own expenses until it had been completed. Those men believed, and yet believe, that the Government of the United States would be willing to meet their actual expenses.

The constitution was drafted and an election was called, so that the voters of the new State might express their views as to whether or not the constitution should be adopted and to express their choice for officers to serve them in the new State. It was ascertained at that time that still there was no appropriation to defray the expenses of the various election officers from precinct officers to State election board, and the question arose as to who would meet the expenses. The two dominant political parties in the State of Oklahoma, in county as well as State, were appealed to, asking that each contribute a portion of the expenses, but one of these parties declined to do so, and it is needless for me to say which one. The gentlemen on the majority side of the House well know which of the two political parties refused to advance any of the expenses necessary for printing the ballots and other expenses of the election machinery. But the expenses, as is well known, were met by individuals who had patriotism enough to at least spend their money, and thereby give the people of the State of Oklahoma a State government.

When the election was held to vote upon the constitution which had been written by our delegates about 250,000 votes were cast, and the majority in favor of the constitution was more than 107,000, thus showing that the people of Oklahoma put patriotism above politics, and thereby ratified the action of their constitutional delegates irrespective of political affiliation. The majority for the constitution was not confined to any political party, and as evidence of that I call your attention to the fact that the Democratic majority for the State officers was from 27,000 to 33,000 votes, thus showing that by an overwhelming majority, irrespective of politics, the constitution was adopted. If you will examine this amendment, it provides for the appropriation of $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, following almost in the exact language of the appropriation in the enabling act of $100,000. It also provides that vouchers for the payment of this money shall be approved by the governor, treasurer, and not less than three supreme judges of the State of Oklahoma, and that the money shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior upon sworn vouchers. I ask you, then, does it not throw a proper safeguard around the Government, and is it not sufficiently clear that no fraud could enter in because of the requirements contained in the amendment. Some gentleman has asked the question as to why the expense is so much greater in forming the State of Oklahoma than it had been in other States. I answer him by saying that the State when admitted into the Union, as shown by a census taken by the direction of our President in 1907, had 1,414,177 people, a population more than twenty times as great as many of the States had when admitted into the Union, with the additional complications that have heretofore been mentioned of the peculiar condition of land tenure in the State, as well as the necessity of organizing many new counties, which had no organization whatever. All the new county officials for the purpose of holding the election had to be appointed and their expenses paid. As a result of these conditions the expenses in the new State of Oklahoma in electing its constitutional delegates, writing its constitution, and holding its first election was much greater than any State in the Union heretofore admitted.

We have more than seven times the population that both Arizona and New Mexico had when the enabling act was passed, but still the enabling act carried an appropriation of $150,000 for Arizona and New Mexico, when only $100,000 was appropriated for Oklahoma and Indian Territory to be formed into a State. I ask you if Oklahoma and Indian Territory should not have an appropriation sufficient to meet its expenses legitimately incurred, even though it be proportionately greater than other States? Some one may undertake to answer this question by saying that the population should not be considered in the expense of writing a constitution; that a constitution could be written as cheaply for a million and a half of people as it could for Nevada, Wyoming, and some of the northwestern States that had in 1900 from 42,000 to 93,000 people, but I answer that by saying that it is not a correct theory and can not be put into successful practice. When you compare conditions that existed in Oklahoma and Indian Territory with other Territories and States you will find that it took a much greater time to solve the complex questions of property interests, of citizenship, and of laying out of new counties than it did in the States which had an organized Territory before being admitted into the Union. Again, the constitutional convention was placed in a position where they could profit by the experience gained from the Constitution of the United States and of her forty-five sister States, and they did profit by that experience, though it cost more and consumed more time, and by that information gained they wrote for the million and a half people now living in the State of Oklahoma a constitution as good as any State in the United States, if not the best. They wrote a constitution which protects the rights of the high and the low, the rich and the poor; they wrote a constitution which protects both capital and labor, but places capital upon the same plane with labor; they wrote a constitution that protects the public-service corporation the same as it does the individual, but at the same time they wrote a constitution that makes corporations know and understand they must obey the law as well as the individual; they wrote a constitution which placed organized labor upon an equal plane with corporations, and thereby provided that the practice of modern years of controlling and blotting out organized labor by injunction should not be indulged in within the State until after the party charged with having violated that injunction had been heard in court and tried before a jury of his countrymen. They made the provisions in that constitution so clear that the common of the commonest may understand and that the grand of the grandest have to obey. They established in that constitution the much-needed rule that I regret to say has been heretofore violated by some of the executives of the States, and that is the right of habeas corpus should never be suspended by a State, profiting as they did by the past experience of some of her sister States in this regard.

All of these questions have been considered and fully considered by our convention, and the expenses incident and necessary to calling the election and voting upon this constitution must of necessity require time and expense, and I submit to you that I do not believe in considering this question that it should be considered from any partisan or political standpoint, but should be considered from the standpoint of what is right and just between sister States. I believe that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to meet the actual and necessary expenses of the organization of the new State of Oklahoma. I believe that it was the intention of the legislators at the time they passed the enabling act that the actual expenses should be met. No man could tell at the time what the expenses would be; and if they seem to be greater than they should have been, when the sworn vouchers are presented and approved by the governor of the State, the treasurer, and not less than three of the supreme judges, and the Secretary of the Interior passes upon these vouchers and pays them, can anyone say that fictitious or fraudulent claims have been presented? I never yet, nor do I ever hope to reach the point in life where I believe that our officers are corrupt. I believe that they will perform every duty imposed upon them under the law, and when they have done so under the provisions of this amendment no fraudulent or unjust claim could possibly be presented and paid, and I appeal to the Members of this House to duly consider this question before passing upon it and refusing to allow it.

This is not a question of politics and should never become a question of politics when the entire citizenship of a sovereign State is interested. No politics should enter into a question of general interest to all of the State, and the man or Representative who can not rise above partisan politics in the presentation and consideration of claims of this character should look well before acting, and in my mind is not considering the interests of his people. I rejoice to say that in the discussion of this amendment not one word has been heard from the minority side of this House in opposition to this amendment, and I regret to say that in the discussion of this amendment the only objections raised against it have been raised by the gentlemen who are on the majority side of this House. It may be that they are prompted by a spirit of patriotism and love of their country; it may be that they are prompted by a desire to see that no improper and unlawful appropriations are made, and it may be that they are prompted to raise these objections to this appropriation because of the fact that Oklahoma did not measure up to the standard expected when the enabling act was passed and did not return to the National Legislature a majority of its Representatives of the same political party as the majority of this House.

But be that as it may, in conclusion I desire to say that I appeal to you upon the majority side of this House to calmly, considerately, and dispassionately consider whether or not it is right and just that the expenses of writing the constitution and holding the elections in the new State of Oklahoma should be borne by the Government of the United States, or whether or not that expense should be heaped upon one of your sister States, who is an infant in the Union and who has not sufficient taxable property to raise a revenue to sustain its State and county government in many of its counties, because of the land tenure where the Indian lands are located and which can not be taxed by the government. I respectfully submit that you perhaps have the power and the votes to vote down this amendment; you may have the power and the rules of the House to exclude it upon a point of order, but I serve notice upon you now that if you do defeat it by a partisan vote, or if it goes out upon a point of order, it will rise again, and that, too, in this House and before the committees, and in the State of Oklahoma, where an impartial sovereignty can in the coming election in November set its seal upon partisan action when right and justice enters into the question being considered.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in support of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I have here a telegram from the governor of Oklahoma which states that the deficiency in the expenses of holding the constitutional convention is $84,195, and that the estimated deficiency made by ex-Secretary Filson, of the Territory, of the election expenses—that is, the expenses of holding the election whereat we elected our delegates to the constitutional convention and the election which ratified the constitution—amounts to $130,140.25.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that the United States ought to pay the expenses of the election at which the officers of the State were elected?

Mr. FULTON. Well, if we had had a separate election for the officers of the State I would say no; but when we were compelled to elect our officers at the same time that we voted on the constitution, the expense of electing officers would be no more than for voting on the constitution, and I say the Government should pay it, because they should pay the expenses of holding our election. Now, I do not know what has been the purpose or the idea which has prompted Congress heretofore in all other instances to make appropriations to bear the expenses of bringing a Territory into the Union. I apprehend it went on the theory of the Territory not having the power to create funds for this purpose, and also on the other theory that she really was a child, as you might say, of the Government, and that it was the right and the duty of Congress to bear these expenses. That being true, then it seems to me that the amount of the appropriation would be governed by the amount which is necessary to defray these expenses, irrespective of the amount.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may have investigated—I am sure I have not—in order to know whether Congress, in fact, has appropriated to pay the expenses of the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, all the expenses of the convention, and then all the expenses of the ratification.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

Mr. FULTON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will permit, I would like to give my colleague [Mr. FERRIS] opportunity to reply.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I will say to the gentleman that I investigated the last four States that were admitted into the Union, and in each case a deficiency appropriation was asked for, and in each case received; and I wish to say in addition, regarding another remark that was made, that this State of Oklahoma equals in population fourteen times the population of the last three States admitted.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that most of them are Indians. I wanted to get some other information—not the particular information which the gentleman has given. It seems that four States have been investigated. Has anyone gone further than that, in order to know?

Mr. FULTON. I have not.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to say to the gentleman that in the case of the State of Utah, by the act of June 8, 1896, there was a deficiency appropriation of $9,609.50, supplementing an appropriation of $30,000 for convention expenses.

Mr. MANN. Does that include the ratification of the constitution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. That was my understanding, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Are those the only figures that the gentleman has?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no other figures.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that my colleague from the Fifth District [Mr. FERRIS] wants to present a few figures on this question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to know if you did not have to reassemble the convention for the purpose of making changes that possibly had been suggested by the President and by the Attorney-General of the United States, and that that necessitated additional expense?

Mr. FULTON. That is true.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much?

Mr. FULTON. I could not state the exact amount that was caused by the second convening of the constitutional convention.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much do you ask by this amendment?

Mr. FULTON. This amendment asks for a certain amount, as certified by the governor, of $225,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. If the practice in other States that have been admitted to the Union had been the same, does the gentleman from Oklahoma think it fair to ask Congress to appropriate $250,000, or any such large sum of money, without giving to Congress an opportunity to ascertain upon investigation whether that is the amount that should be appropriated?

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman evidently did not hear the resolution when it was read.

Mr. MADDEN. I heard the resolution.

Mr. FULTON. I mean the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that Congress should investigate, and not the officials in Oklahoma, when any appropriation should be made, and that it is Congress or a committee of Congress that should make the investigation and ascertain whether or not the amount sought to be appropriated is the amount that should be appropriated.

Mr. CARTER. Will you accept that amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I will make no promise.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that this requires the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the certificate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that resolution was so changed that it was to be passed on by a Federal official or by Congress, then would you be willing to withdraw opposition to this and let it go?

Mr. MADDEN. I asked this question of the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I will say to the gentleman from Missouri in reply that if he believes and if it is established that the practice inaugurated by Congress in former instances was to make appropriations for deficiencies in such cases I still would insist that this appropriation should be made after investigation. I do not think that that investigation could be made on the floor of this House by the Committee of the Whole House. I think that the people who had charge of the election in Oklahoma should be brought before committees of this House and explain as to the amount of money expended in the election before any appropriation shall be made at all. That is where I stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, as we have used his time up.

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. If the gentleman will excuse me a moment. Of course the gentleman from Oklahoma knows that the point of order is to be pressed against this, and it must go out.

Mr. FULTON. I was simply hoping that you would not press it.

Mr. VREELAND. Even if this were a proper account to come in, it would not come in the urgent deficiency bill. Gentlemen should collect their information and appear before the committee in order that it may have a hearing by the committee for some subsequent bill. It certainly ought not to come in on an urgent deficiency bill when no hearing has been given.

Mr. FULTON. Can you assure me that the point of order will not be raised then?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman knows that I could not assure that in a membership of nearly 400 men.

Mr. FULTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that only two things should be considered. In the first place, does Congress want to make the appropriation for any amount to defray that kind of expense, and, in the second place, if it does, is this amount correct? It does seem to me that in view of the practice that heretofore has prevailed when these expenses have been paid, irrespective of the amount——

Mr. TAWNEY. I must state to the gentleman that has not been the practice. Congress has appropriated a certain amount, and whatever additional expense has been incurred has been borne by the new State.

Mr. FULTON. The last four States admitted show that deficiencies were provided for. Well, now, our amendment provides that not one penny of this money shall be paid out except on sworn vouchers presented to the Secretary of the Interior, and that these vouchers be signed by the different officials of Oklahoma. So there can be no question whatever that any sum will be paid out except that which has been honestly expended. I ask the Members of this House to consider this question. It was not our fault, as a matter of fact, that the expense was as large as it was. But I can not go into that in the time that I have. It seems to me that this is a simple proposition that must appeal to everyone. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is perfectly obvious—it proposes to take care of the expenses incurred in the organization of the State of Oklahoma. It is just such legislation as has been necessary, as has been enacted for many other States, and I can see no just reason why any fair-minded man should oppose it. It has been shown during the course of this debate that, at least in four instances heretofore, such expenses have been appropriated for other States.

The gentleman from Indiana has charged that we spent a greater amount of money than any of the other States. Our reply to that is that we had a much greater number of people to deal with than any other State at the time of its organization; that we are confronted by more complex conditions than any other State, and, above all, that we have written a great deal better constitution than any other State in this Union. [Laughter on Republican side. Applause on Democratic side.]

Notwithstanding the derision and adverse criticism that may come from the Republican side of this Chamber, I want to say that we people in Oklahoma believe in our constitution. We have an abiding faith in that instrument, and our election returns upon the constitution prove it. If it has cost more money to organize our State and write our constitution than that of any other State, we lay the fault at the door of the Federal Government and exculpate Oklahoma. Under the long-range bureaucratic government that had been doled out to our two Territories from this city the very principles of justice and equity had, in a large measure, been subverted. We charge that the administration of affairs by the Federal Government in our State was totally inadequate, for the reason that the field of application was far too remote from the source of government, for the very same cause that our futile attempts to govern isolated colonial possessions are proving incompetent and unsound, and will continue to prove incompetent and subversive of their intent. Under these adverse conditions the great public-service corporations had fastened their poisonous fangs deep into the vitals of the body politic, even before the birth of our young State, and it required the application of the most heroic remedies by our constitutional convention to wrench from these hydra-headed monsters the power they had acquired under the Federal Government and restore to the people of Oklahoma their just rights under our State constitution.

It is true our constitution has many new features, and these are calculated to meet new conditions which have arisen since the enactment of the fundamental law of other States. Many of these new provisions are, of course, experimental, and as no man or set of men are infallible, some of them will doubtless fall short of our expectations.

Viewing our constitution in this light, we believe that it is an instrument that will prove beneficial as a guide to every other State in this Union, and possibly to the Federal Government itself. For if the Oklahoma constitution proves a good constitution, giving more adequate protection to the people's rights than the organic law of the older States, then every State in this Union will have the privilege of adopting these novel provisions and get the benefit of them without the disadvantage of being forced to try them out on her own people first. While if such provisions should fail to make good or prove detrimental, then the people of Oklahoma alone must suffer the consequences.

So we believe, Mr. Chairman, that we are, at least, entitled to some consideration as pioneers in constitution making, for taking the initiative, for blazing the way, and hoisting the signal lights which other States, and even the Federal Government itself, may easily follow without the danger of experiment, should our constitution prove the righteous boon we think it will. [Applause.]

Whatever other people may think of the Oklahoma constitution, our election returns show that it has the unqualified approval of the people of our State, irrespective of politics. These returns will reveal the fact that while the Democrats only carried the State by twenty-five or thirty thousand, this constitution was adopted by more than 100,000 majority, showing that at least 35,000 supporters of the Republican nominees voted for the ratification of this "heinous abortion," as some of the leading Republicans have seen fit to dub this document.

Therefore any attempt to cast aspersions upon this instrument will be resented by a large majority of the patriotic citizens of our magnificent young Commonwealth, irrespective of their political affiliation.

This great American House of Representatives is composed, in my opinion, of the stalwart patriots of our Republic, no matter what creed or platform they may espouse, and I believe you will countenance and sanction the unselfish patriotism evidenced by the 112 delegates who worked so long and assiduously, without compensation most of the time, to give to our country freedom and statehood, and to the American people an unequaled sample of up-to-date Constitution. [Applause.]

Surely the gentlemen on the other side of this aisle will not attempt to make a party issue of this amendment, and thereby forever consign their political associates in Oklahoma to eternal banishment from participation in the governmental affairs of that State. Do not despair, gentlemen, it can not be said that the result of the last Oklahoma election is, by any manner of means, a certain criterion on which to base future results in that State.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not desire us to make the State Republican, I presume.

Mr. CARTER. No, sir. There is little danger of that at the present time, but I just want to sound a few notes of warning to the gentlemen on that side, for future reference.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not mean to insinuate that no person will be allowed to vote the Republican ticket in Oklahoma unless we do what the gentleman wants.

Mr. CARTER. I do not. I made no such insinuation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to convey the idea that if we will give the $200,000 you will elect a Republican next time?

Mr. CARTER. No, sir. I mean to say this to the gentleman from Iowa, that if you continue to make a football of Oklahoma, you will lose the little support and following you have there. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is only difference in degree and not in kind.

Mr. CARTER. I furthermore want to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that since certain restrictions have been removed upon the liberties of the people of Oklahoma, politics have undergone a change. We had you believing that we were Republican before statehood, but since we were admitted we have gone slightly Democratic. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that it does not seem to make any difference, even in the State of Texas. Even with all the votes they contribute to you, they still hold up there pretty well.

Mr. CARTER. I presume the gentleman from Iowa is making the same impression in his own State.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is a matter which the gentleman and his own State will have to take care of.

Mr. CARTER. No more than expected from the majority side of this House. [Laughter and applause.]

We of the Democratic faith had much the best of the evidence and argument in the first political contest in Oklahoma. The very fact that the Federal Government, which was Republican, had permitted our prodigious young State to be delivered, prostrate and helpless, with the iron grip of the monster trusts at her throat, the dilatory and erroneous administration of affairs incident to government at a distance, the making of our State a dumping ground for disappointed politicians from other States, and the further fact that many Republican voters feared that their leaders were insincere in their indorsement of our constitution, all contributed to the success of Democracy, and many big, broad-shouldered Republicans, dissatisfied with the treatment accorded Oklahoma by their own party, stood shoulder to shoulder with the patriots of Democracy for restitution to the people of their just rights.

Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that our Oklahoma citizenship is most cosmopolitan, emanating from every State in the Union; in fact, from the four quarters of the globe; and for the felicitation of the gentleman from Arkansas I desire to say that many of these good people hail from his splendid State and are numbered among our best and most substantial citizens.

A change of residence naturally makes a change in surrounding conditions, often causing an intelligent man to view public issues from an entirely different angle, even in some instances reaching the extent of a complete change of his political views. Hence a man who was a stanch Republican in his native State might be a good Democrat in Oklahoma, and vice versa.

Another element of uncertainty is the large number of first voters who took part in the Oklahoma election. Over on Indian Territory side I believe the first Democratic poll showed over 60 per cent of those of voting age to be first voters; about 10 to 20 per cent, I take it, were first voters on the west side. Therefore almost one-half of the voting population of our State cast their initial vote, so far as national affairs are concerned, in this our first election. The leaders in both parties in Oklahoma believe that such people as these are not politically anchored to either end of this Republic. The race there will go to the swiftest, and such free lances as these will, to a large extent, vote with the party that treats them best and offers the best inducements.

Now, I leave it to your good judgment as to how they will view your refusal to allow this appropriation, which will result in saddling this enormous expense on the taxpayers of the new State, with one-half of its lands already exempt from taxation by acts of this same majority on that side of the House. I want to warn you, gentlemen, if you defeat this measure by an application of the party whip on that side of the House, you do it at the peril of your party in Oklahoma. You imperil the chances of the few men whom you were able to pull through in our last election. [Applause on Democratic side.] I know that advice to Republicans does not come with very good grace from this side of the Chamber, but I warn you nevertheless that it is a fact, and I think that the only Republican Member from Oklahoma will agree with me. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma think that that fact will influence this side of the House to decide what it would do?

Mr. CARTER. I don't know. It is pretty hard to tell just what that side of the House might do. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it would have any effect on this side of the House. The gentleman from Oklahoma misunderstands the temper of this body if he thinks that political considerations would affect this side of the Chamber on this question.

Mr. CARTER. I hope so; and then, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that such a measure as this is by no means a partisan measure. It is just; it is right; it is regular; it is backed and fortified by precedent, and will, I hope, be considered on a broad, high plane of statesmanship, free from partisan prejudice.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wanted us to vote this appropriation because it would affect politics down there. Does the gentleman consider that a broad, high plane?

Mr. CARTER. That is the light in which I would like to see this amendment considered, and I hope that our friends across the way will consider it in such light, and not oppose this amendment simply because they want to get back at Oklahoma for going Democratic. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the committee is now considering the urgency deficiency bill which deals with deficits that have occurred during the last fiscal year and have been unprovided for by former appropriation measures. The section we seek to amend is on pages 11 and 12 of that measure. The section deals with Oklahoma deficiencies and is as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Territory of Oklahoma: For salaries of the following from July 1 to November 15, 1907, inclusive, namely: For governor at the rate of $3,000 per annum; chief justice and six associates at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, and secretary at the rate of $1,800 per annum; in all, $12,300. To pay account of legislative expenses, Territory of Oklahoma, as set forth on page 16 of House document numbered 488 of the present session of Congress, $545.45.

The amendment we offer as the representatives of the State of Oklahoma is that the American Congress finish paying the expenses of the constitutional convention delegates, the clerks, and commissioners of the newly organized counties; the expense of holding the election for the ratification of the constitution; the printing incident thereto, and other incidental expenses connected with the organization of the State government.

In support of this amendment it is my purpose and desire to offer a few figures and facts, which I think will enable the committee to determine that this amendment is proper, that it is the duty of the Government to pay this character of expense connected with the admission of Oklahoma into the Union.

It will be remembered that at the time of the passage of the enabling act in June, 1906, that the only population that Congress had within reach was the census of 1899, which gave that portion of the State then known as Indian Territory 97,361, and Oklahoma Territory, which includes the west half of the present State of Oklahoma, 109,191, or a total of about 206,552. These figures will readily let the committee understand why it was that Congress at that time only appropriated about one-third enough to defray the necessary expenses incident to statehood. For since that time, gentlemen of the committee, the President of this United States has ordered a census taken that was concluded only last summer (the summer of 1907), and that made the remarkable disclosure that we had a growing population of 1,414,000 people, or about seven times the population that Congress had calculated upon at the time of admission.

I want to further make the observation that while we have had one appropriation, and are asking for a deficiency, we are not without precedent in making the request. It has been my pleasure to examine the data relative to the last four States that have been admitted into the Union, and I note that in each case a deficiency was asked for and in each case was graciously received.

I don't come in a complaining attitude asking for this relief, for I am sure it was an honest mistake. I don't come asking for my people what other States have been refused. I don't desire to consure anyone for their failure to make an adequate appropriation in the beginning, but I am here asking earnestly that the proper amount be now appropriated to the State of Oklahoma, of which I know you will be truly proud as a sister State.

It has been suggested that the States I refer to received much smaller appropriations than we are asking, and I am more than willing to confess that is true, but in making this confession it would be unfair to this Congress, unfair to this committee, unfair to the States referred to, and unfair to my own home State of Oklahoma if I did not make the observation that our recent census shows us to have approximately fourteen times the population of either of the States recently admitted, they averaging approximately 100,000 and under, and we now actually possessing by a Republican census over 1,400,000 people. This, in my judgment, offers one reason for the request that surely must present itself very forcibly to this committee, and surely would so present itself to every painstaking, thinking man.

The States that I have just referred to are the sister States of South Dakota, North Dakota, Washington, and Montana. I am sure you are proud of them and we as residents of Oklahoma are likewise proud of them. It was necessary in each of those cases to have a deficiency appropriation and they were admitted so recently, within the last ten or twelve years, that the statute of limitations has hardly had time to run and be a bar to a request coming from Oklahoma.

As a second and perhaps more pregnant reason than the first one why this request is not a violent one, is that a very large portion of the State is not subject to taxation. It being largely Indian lands and cumbered with Federal restrictions against sale, alienation and taxation. This has made the revenues of the State light; this has made the State have an uphill pull to properly organize and doff the clothing of "territorism" and take on the new raiment of statehood.

As a further reason why this appropriation is earnestly requested, we desire to make the observation that the entire eastern half of the State has never enjoyed or been permitted to enjoy the blessings of local self-government. They have never had a representative in Congress before; they have never had a county officer, a township officer, not even a justice of the peace or constable elected and chosen from their own people. They did not even have counties or other subdivisions of the State, they had never held an election, they were unaccustomed to voting and were wholly unsupplied with election paraphernalia. I submit it is painful to refer to; "it is pitiful to believe." Yet in the face of all this these heroic people have drawn themselves together, have organized their counties, have organized their State, have held their elections and elected by the popular vote of the people 112 delegates to a constitutional convention and in strict conformity with the enabling act and have molded the best constitution upon which the sun has ever shone. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Prior to this election of the constitutional convention the State had to be districted into proper subdivisions suitable for the holding of an election, which was a great task and a great expense. After the formation of a constitution in strict conformity with the enabling act they must then call an election and adopt or reject that organic law which was molded and made under adverse circumstances and largely at their own expense. The election was a great expense, the printing was a great expense; no public printing offices, no statehouse, no place to hold the convention. Halls had to be rented for the holding of the convention and expenses were incurred that were necessary, of which it is not within my power to impart nor within your time and disposition to have me here reiterate.

I say to you not one cent was spent dishonestly. Not one cent was squandered. Not one cent was lost or destroyed, but all used and more to carry out the true spirit and intent of the enabling act which is a product of your own pen. You would not have us enact a constitution of which you and the succeeding generations would be ashamed. "You would not have us slight the work." You would have us act in strict conformity with its provisions as I maintain and proclaim we did. [Loud applause.]

I have been criticised for asking for such a large amount as the amendment provides for. In reply thereto I desire to make reference to the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and I speak of them in the highest of terms, for they are our neighbors and our friends. They have a population combined of less than a hundred thousand, as shown by the last census, the exact figures being as follows: Arizona, 44,081; New Mexico, 55,067 making a total of 99,148. This Congress at the time of making the original appropriation for Oklahoma appropriated $150,000 for them and $100,000 for us. I don't speak complainingly nor with the spirit of envy or jealousy, but merely to explain the grave necessity of now giving Oklahoma exactly what she needs for State organization and no more.

Now, gentlemen, when those States formerly referred to came with a request for an additional appropriation just as we are doing to-day, they did not come in bad grace then. Why should you hold that we come in bad grace now? I think it was proper for them to come then. I think it is proper for us to come now.

Now one word regarding the wording of the amendment, and that is for the sole purpose of showing that every account claimed or asked for must be properly audited by the governor, the secretary of state, and countersigned by three or more members of the supreme court of the State, and after that approved by the secretary of the Interior. Is there any chance for any misappropriation? Is there any chance to be mistaken about this honest deficit? Surely there can be none.

I for one citizen felt proud the day the statehood bill passed. I for one citizen of the State feel proud to-day. The State of Oklahoma felt glad and her cups ran o'er with joy then and do now. The State and every citizen within her borders feel grateful to Congress for her admission and will ever so feel. Then, gentlemen of the committee, I earnestly ask of you not to side step precedent and refuse us what other States have had. Don't refuse to deal with us in the hour of need.

The State is new. Her resources are many—that is quite true. She is a giant in the rough. Still, at the crucial time of changing from a Territory to a State she richly needs, and, as I believe, truly deserves that she be started off right. Don't hide your lights under a bushel for this request of the State. Don't refuse her this honest request. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. I again repeat that as an individual citizen of Oklahoma and as one of the representatives of the million and a half of people living within her borders, I do not come complaining by reason of the fact that an insufficient amount was appropriated, but do come asking that an honest mistake may be now righted. We appreciated the one hundred thousand then appropriated, and we used it and tried to get along on that amount, but could not. We tried to make a constitution and hold an election and get the constitution adopted on that amount, but could not, and are now doing just what foresight could not foretell—asking for enough to pay the honest deficiency.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who made the mistake of giving the wrong estimate?

Mr. FERRIS. I merely say it was an honest mistake, merely an honest estimate that has later proved insufficient and is now within the power and the precedent of this Congress to supply. It was occasioned merely by an unprecedented growth and increase in the population of the State; and further, I am quite sure Congress did not have in mind the fact that the eastern portion of the State was largely free from taxation on account of being Indian land and wholly unorganized. It was a much larger expense to district and organize the new State than anyone had anticipated, and the condition has not so presented itself in any of the former States. In those States they had had at least a provisional government, with election machinery and paraphernalia suitable for the holding of an election, a place suitable for the holding of a convention free from rent and other incidental expenses, and that their lands, or the major portion thereof, was at least on the tax rolls, subject to the burdens of taxation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and his colleagues have been Members of the House now since it was organized. Has the gentleman or his colleagues been before any committee of the House in reference to this proposed appropriation, or has he presented any claim or statement to any committee of the House, written or oral, in regard to it?

Mr. FERRIS. I submit to the gentleman's question and in reply thereto beg to say that our State is in the throes of organization, her first State legislature is now in session and up until this very day—and I have the telegram that bears the date of this day—I have been unable to get the information that I now seek to present to the House, but inasmuch as this measure deals with deficiency matters, and the very section we seek to amend deals with the payment of Oklahoma officers during the interim between territorism and statehood, I have hoped that no more opportune time could present itself than this very day and this very time. [Loud applause on the Democratic side of the House.]

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman appreciate then that if he has not received information which could be laid before the House committee until to-day that he ought to wait and put it before the proper committee of the House at the proper time?

Mr. FERRIS. In reply to the gentleman's question I think I can plainly see what would happen if we elected to take the advice of the gentleman from Illinois. This is an urgent deficiency bill. This bill provides for deficiencies of this particular character and if Oklahoma should let her chance go by to-day I fear the gentleman would then, perhaps properly, arise in his seat and announce that the amendment was out of order, and, further, that Oklahoma had slept on her rights. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I know that it is within the power of this House to grant or refuse this relief. I know it is the province of this House to be economical in all governmental matters, but I don't believe now, nor never shall, that Congress would make a mistake in lifting this burden from the neck of Oklahoma and let her start off with the rest. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman receives applause from men on that side of the House who are not familiar with the rules or practices of this House, but with those who are familiar with the rules and practices of the House, they know that this item, if it belongs anywhere, belongs properly on the general deficiency appropriation bill, which bill will not be reported to this House for some time to come, and the gentleman will have ample opportunity to lay before the Committee on Appropriations all the facts and precedents, and doubtless will receive all that he ought to receive in accordance with those facts and precedents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to state to the gentleman from Illinois that this matter was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress.

Mr. FERRIS. And passed the Senate last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A memorial was presented by the constitutional convention of Oklahoma pointing out the fact that it would be impossible to continue a convention with the amount appropriated, and the committee declined to consider the application.

Mr. MANN. And the fact that they made such a statement—which was not true, because that they did continue is evident—at least, it did not interfere at all with anything out there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken, the gentleman misunderstood what I said. I said they could not continue with the amount of money allotted. They did continue because the Democratic Campaign Committee, I understand, advanced the money for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] impeaches the knowledge of Members on this side of the House who applauded when he gave an answer to the gentleman, because the gentleman from Illinois says those who applauded do not understand the rules of the House. Now, fortunately for that side of the House that rule does not apply. If it did no person on that side of the House could applaud except one, because nobody on that side of the House understands the rules except the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, recognizing as I do that the gentleman from Kentucky understands all things that he applauded, knowing how well he is acquainted with the rules, I withdraw my statement as to him.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Well, I can not with good grace withdraw my statement in regard to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentelman if he will kindly explain to the committee how it was you continued with your convention without any money? That is the first question. Second, to what extent was this deficit due to this misstatement as to population? Now I do not mean to say there was any willful misstatement, but the census did not enumerate all your people when it was taken, and the appropriation was passed upon that erroneous census. Now those two questions I would like to hear you explain.

Mr. FERRIS. I had not hoped to consume so much of the committee's time, but the question of the gentleman from Tennessee has led me to the belief that the committee is not clear on what was done with the money.

In reply to the first question of the gentleman, would say that I think it was largely due to that phase of the matter. No one knew the population of the State. No one knew how difficult it was to properly organize and start the State off on its feet. The men in charge acted in absolute good faith. No time nor money was ever squandered or wasted. It was an era of painstaking effort on the part of the Oklahoma citizenship, and the constitution is the product of which we are truly proud. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In reply to the second question, would say that it was based on an old census, ten years old, and the population of Oklahoma has, by reason of recent openings and sales of public lands, wonderfully increased, as is shown by the figures heretofore given.

In reply to the gentleman's question as to how the convention was able to continue in session after the money was gone, will say that many of them were poor farmers who had to neglect and leave their crops to attend their duties in the convention. Many of them were wholly unable to bear the expense at all, and in that class of cases the ones who had would divide with the brother who had not. They were not aristocrats that built that constitution, and we are proud of it. They were not men who went there to distinguish themselves and cover themselves with glory, but who went there with an honest heart, a good conscience, and the product they created shows my version of the matter is true. [Applause.]

If that constitution had been made by autocrats we would not have had a provision for a general primary election; would not have had a provision for the initiative and referendum; would not have had an eight-hour day on the public works for the laborers of the State; would not have had within its borders a two-cent rate on every road within the State; would not have had a railway commission which has lowered the freight rates of Oklahoma in the past three years more than one-third of their former tariff; would not have provided for a board of public charities to look after the unfortunate and the poor; would not have had the longed-for "fellow-servants law" that every good citizen should support and want; would not have had strong impeachment laws for the removal from office for malfeasance in office; would not have prescribed that for every officer taking the oath of office in that State that he must swear that he has not, either directly or indirectly, paid or given anything of value to aid or in any manner contribute to the bringing about of his election or nomination; that he will not while in office ride on any free pass or accept any other complimentary thing to influence his official duties in any manner whatsoever; would not have made the charter of every corporation subject to referendum vote by the voters of the State; would not have made the constitution so simple and easy of amendment that a majority of the legislature may change its terms, but they do not become operative until submitted to a vote of the people of the State.

Laws like these are the product of that constitution; laws like these are what those convention delegates were doing on their own expense; laws like these are what we are asking you to help pay for; laws like these are the laws that don't tell the people they are powerful and sovereign, but it makes them so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman, but will not insist upon the request. I yield the floor. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Do you base the obligation on the part of the Government to defray these expenses upon any other ground than the fact that Congress in the past appropriated money for this purpose in the admission of other States?

Mr. FERRIS. In response to the gentleman I will state that I base it on that as one thing and in addition to that I think it is justice, and I think it is right that when a State is in the throes of organization, passing from territorialism to statehood, which is indeed a critical time, no land on the tax roll, no organization of county or State government, if there is an instance in the life of a Territory or State when they need assistance at the hands of this Government, surely it would be during that trying period and assuredly precedent has so held in the past.

Mr. TAWNEY. But as a matter of fact there is no legal or other obligation resting upon the Federal Government to defray any part of these expenses, and your demand now is based solely upon precedent and there is no precedent that you can cite where any State has received 75 per cent of the amount your State has received.

Mr. FERRIS. But, my dear sir, not in proportion to the population. We have a population thirteen times as large as the last four States admitted, and we are only asking for about three times as much as they had.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the question of population never determined or controlled Congress in the past in making the appropriations for defraying these expenses.

Mr. FERRIS. Then, if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will yield me one moment, I desire to say that there never has been a parallel case in the admission of any other State with Oklahoma, and I will tell you why. The entire eastern half of the State, which is known as Indian Territory, had no provisional government, had no county officers, had no representatives, had no taxes other than city and personal property tax——

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true.

Mr. FERRIS. And the first thing they had to do was to appoint county officers during that provisional government.

Mr. TAWNEY. But in the enabling act Congress also gave to your State an appropriation of $5,000,000 in cash.

Mr. FERRIS. That was in lieu of the school lands that belonged to the Oklahoma side, so that Indian Territory might start off square with the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am justified in permitting the discussion to continue any longer. The point of order is made against this provision, and the gentleman who made it insists upon it. It is new legislation, and the appropriation is not authorized by law, and I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. For a minute; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman how much larger was the convention, the number of delegates in the convention, which framed this constitution, than those in former States, and how much greater was the population in the State of Oklahoma than in other States that have been formed?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He has stated the population proposition half a dozen times.

Mr. FERRIS. The population was thirteen times that of the last States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact also that Oklahoma is the largest and most populous Territory that has been admitted into the Union in years?

Mr. FERRIS. It is.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was the amount of money Congress gave to the State of Oklahoma in keeping with that condition of things?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Because of that you have this large deficit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. It is clear to the Chair that the proposed amendment contains several legislative provisions, and consequently violates Rule XXI, which provides that in a general appropriation bill no appropriation is in order unless authorized by existing law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, when I rose to speak a moment ago I did not expect to be fired into by our friends across the aisle before I donned my war paint; but they did so, and I would like to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, during my remarks I was interrupted by gentlemen asking for time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive office: For additional amount required for Engineer Commissioner (to make salary $5,000 per annum) for the fiscal years that follow:
Fiscal year 1908, $383.50;
For the fiscal year 1907, $135.10.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking whether this salary is provided by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a statutory salary.

Mr. MANN. Then how does it happen that there is a deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. The former Engineer was a colonel; he was succeeded by a captain, and this represents the difference between a colonel's pay and a captain's.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. As I understand, this has nothing to do with the rank and no part of this money can be used except to make up the difference between his salary and the $5,000 that is given the Commissioners.

Mr. HARDY. I rise, Mr. Chairman, before the close of the day, to incorporate in the RECORD what I would have liked to have asked of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. The gentleman, speaking this afternoon, said something with reference to the panic of 1893——

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not, under the five-minute rule, go outside of matters before the House. The House might as well come to that. The gentleman is not to be blamed for not being familiar with that, although he is a very conspicuous new Member here. In the Committee of the Whole, when we get to the five-minute rule, you must talk about the bill.

Mr. HARDY. If there is any objection, I bow to the superior wisdom of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may not thank me; I did it in a very courteous way. The next time I will do it differently, as the gentleman does not seem to appreciate courtesy at all.

Mr. HARDY. Whenever the gentleman forgets to be courteous I assure him I will reply in kind. His courtesy is appreciated for all it is worth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Texas has a perfect right to extend his remarks in the RECORD, notwithstanding what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. MANN. That is not what he was doing.

Mr. HARDY. I say I desire to put in the RECORD what I would like to have said now and what I would have liked to ask the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that request now? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa has stated that the panic of 1893 was caused by the Democratic triumph of 1892 and the country's anticipation of Democratic tariff reform. On that question I submit these facts, and in addition to these facts I want to state further that I have always understood and have heard it stated on the floor of this House without challenge that before the Administration of Mr. Harrison retired they knew they were necessary, and they had already prepared the plates for the bonds that had to be issued by Mr. Cleveland, and for which Republicans afterwards criticised him.

November 11, 1890, the reports showed financial distress in New York. The New York Clearing House Association voted its certificates to banks in need of assistance.

The Boston Clearing House Association did the same thing November 17. Barker Bros. & Co., big bankers in Philadelphia, suspended at that time, with liabilities placed at $5,000,000.

November 19, 1890, there was a run on the Citizens' Savings Bank, of New York, and a receiver was appointed for the North River Bank.

November 22, 1890, the United Rolling Stock Company, of Chicago, assigned, with liabilities at $6,851,000.

November 28, 1890, B. K. Jamieson & Co., the Philadelphia bankers, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

December 6, 1890, the Oliver Iron and Steel Mills, of Pittsburg, shut down, discharging 2,000 employees. On the same date the cotton firm of Myer & Co., of New Orleans, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

January 3, 1891, the Scottdale Rolling Mills and Pike Works and the Charlotte Furnace and Coke Works in Pennsylvania closed, throwing 10,000 employees out of work.

January 18, 1891, the American National Bank, at Kansas City, suspended, with liabilities at $2,250,000.

May 8, 1891, the Spring Garden National Bank, at Philadelphia, closed its doors, and the Pennsylvania Safe Deposit and Trust Company made an assignment.

The Homestead strike and other strikes during 1892, and prior to election day, are well remembered by the people.

The record discloses that the first indications of the so-called "panic" of 1893 were given November 11, 1890, a little more than thirty days after the McKinley tariff bill became a law. From that date the panic raged, and while its effects were felt for several years, it reached its worst stage in 1893 and during the early days of 1894, during all of which time the Republican tariff law was in effect.

The late Thomas B. Reed, after his retirement from the Speakership, delivered a speech in New York, in which he said: "Another thing which led this whole country into the error of 1892 was the history of the last thirty years. During all that time we have been prosperous." The New York World called this "cold, colossal, and impudent falsification of history," and said that it must have astonished those among his hearers whose memories were more than one year long. Then this New York paper gave Mr. Reed these interesting reminders:

"The panic of 1873, under Republican rule and twelve years of high tariff taxation, was the most disastrous and the period of business depression for five years thereafter was the most severe of any in history. It was officially estimated that 3,000,000 workingmen were out of employment. Bankruptcy was widespread. A tidal wave of ruin and distress swept over the country.

"From 1881 to 1886, under two Republican tariffs, there were labor strikes involving 22,304 establishments and 1,323,203 workmen. Of these strikes 9,439 were for an increase of wages and 4,344 against reductions of wages.

"Mr. Reed's party tinkered the tariff in 1883. In that year there were 9,184 business failures, involving $172,874,000. In 1884 there were 10,968 failures, involving $226,343,000. In the next year, still under the Republican tariff and currency laws, there was a general business depression. More than 1,000,000 men were out of employment.

"In 1890 the McKinley bill was passed, and there were 10,673 failures in that year and 12,394 in the next, with liabilities in each year amounting to nearly $200,000,000. The tariff was raised to nearly 50 per cent, but wages either stood still or declined, while the prices of necessaries advanced. The protected manufacturers kept all their 'bonus,' as usual.

"Tramps and trusts, the twin products of a monopolists' tariff, were practically unknown in this country until we had endured uninterrupted Republican rule for a dozen years.

"The worst labor troubles, the bloodiest riots, the most destructive strikes, the most brutal lockouts ever known in any country have occurred here under the high tariffs, bought, made, and paid for by the contributors of the Republican campaign funds."

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing to-day a measure which will take from the public Treasury funds to be devoted to the improvement and development of the national capital.

The fact that we are making such appropriations brings forcibly to my mind the conditions under which the country has been laboring since October last, when men of criminal wealth, in order to escape the punishment which justly should be meted out to them, sought to create a situation that would impel the Government to stop enforcement of the law. Fortunately the condition of our country was such that we were able to emerge from it suffering only from a currency stringency and a slight depression which prosperity has obviated.

We are here to pass laws which shall deal fairly and justly with the public interests. The Republican party has passed such laws. The representatives of the Republican party have enforced those laws. The enforcement, which applies equally to the rich as to the poor, aroused all those guilty of dishonest practices who feared the exposure of their deeds and the consequent punishment.

President Roosevelt, in observing his oath to enforce the law, has not permitted himself to be swerved from what was his plain duty. He was responsible for the railroad rate law, which has been of such inestimable value to the shipping interests of the country. He has exposed crimes perpetrated by the Standard Oil trust, bringing to its knees a corporation which considered itself so powerful that it stood above the Government of the United States. Through the Interstate Commerce Commission he investigated the so-called "Harriman situation," revealing an utterly indefensible condition of affairs caused by the action of the Wall street financiers in illegally combining great railroad systems of the West.

None of us soon can forget Harriman's exploitation of the Chicago and Alton, or the part played by him in attempting to absolutely dominate the Illinois Central.

No one can say that President Roosevelt was responsible for the railroad scandals which the investigation of the Interstate Commerce Commission disclosed. No one can charge President Roosevelt with responsibility for the insurance scandals. The corporation scandals and the stock jobbing scandals which aided in precipitating the financial panic of 1907 must be placed on other shoulders than those of our Republican President.

Throughout his Administrations President Roosevelt has been actuated by honesty, sincerity, and patriotism, and these cardinal virtues he has sought to earnestly impress upon our national life because he appreciated, as we must appreciate, that only through them can the Republic endure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a pamphlet entitled "Roosevelt and the Money Power," which tells succinctly the story of the Roosevelt Administrations. It places where it belongs the responsibility for the panic of 1907, squarely upon the shoulders of those who precipitated it. It is as follows:

"SO COMES A RECKONING WHEN THE BANQUET'S O'ER."

When in the course of time a historian shall marshal the living facts relating to the financial depression which overtook the United States in the year 1907, his generation will read his conclusions and marvel at the truth they reveal.

And that generation with truer perspective than that which is suffering, will stand aghast at the tale of flagrant and flaunting thievery, of reckless and criminal wrong-doing, of wanton and brutal disregard of right and law; and its amazement will be followed by humble thanks to God for the Moses which led their country, purified, undaunted, and uninjured, from the Stygian evils which unscrupulous men had brought upon it.

WHAT HISTORY WILL REVEAL.

"The wickedness of a few is the calamity of all;" and those who had lusted after swollen wealth and power, cared naught that the sickening end of their piratical operations might be mad panic, making men hoard their earnings; threatening to shake national credit and confidence; to close mills and shops, and to bring poverty and anguish in homes where comfort and joy had prevailed. The day has come when the guilty are being haled naked before the judgment seat of public opinion, there to render heavy account for the trust they violated, to reveal the shameful details of how treason triumphed over patriotism, and ambition over conscience; and to confess the desperate and cowardly character of the measures they took to save themselves from punishment.

THE PROGRESS MADE.

Stupendous as has been the progress of the United States since the civil war, it has been accompanied by evils which tinge with sorrow the natural pride every American must feel in the achievement. He has marked that that struggle, instead of weakening, gave strength to the institutions of his Government. He has witnessed the obliteration of sectional lines. He has seen his country become the wealthiest on the face of the earth, and knows that every person in it has partaken of this prosperity. He recalls the easy conquest of a foreign nation, the acquisition of new territories, the liberation of an oppressed people, and the undertaking of the colossal task of connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific, and he has noted the almost commanding influence his Government enjoys in the councils of the world.

THE GOOD AND BAD OF CORPORATIONS.

In the achievement of these marvelous results the American people are greatly indebted to those soulless things known as corporations. Through these combinations it has been possible to form large aggregations of capital, to perfect the methods of business, to extend both the domestic and export trade, and to effect important economies of benefit both to the producer and consumer. Great capital or a large combination of capital is not necessarily inimical to the national welfare, having no essential relation to monopoly. But, unfortunately, a small proportion of these combinations have developed into hugh monopolies, thereby destroying individual initiative, enabling command of the men they employ and weakening the mental and moral fiber of the community, and leading to increased and often extortionate prices. They have sought, and in some instances gained, control of the natural resources of the country and of the food supply of the people, dominated the steel highways of commerce and minimized the use of natural highways, and employed every method possible to aggrandize themselves, not forgetting even to pick the pockets of the very poor. To this end they have purchased city councils, debauched legislatures, placed their minions on the benches of courts of justice and in Congress, and even drawn their slimy trails across the executive machinery of Government. They have possessed no humanitarian sentiments. They were created to exploit, and the purpose strengthened with its exercise.

THE NEED PRODUCES THE MAN.

It is a saying that has become a commonplace that the American people may depend upon their need to produce the man capable of dealing with it. While enormous development was progressing, and evils were waxing strong, there was being fashioned a man capable of assisting the former and overcoming the latter—a man who believed with Lincoln that this is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. Theodore Roosevelt was prepared for the great destiny awaiting him. In those qualities of mind, character, and personality he embodies the ideal of twentieth-century Americanism; and in methods and business of Government he has enjoyed a practical and theoretical training extending back to 1881, when he first assumed public office. Both in peace and war his native courage and decision have been displayed and these characteristics have been strengthened by their use. "Intolerant of evil, his spear knows no brother." The good of the people has been and is his single purpose.

HIS UNSELFISH VOW.

So when in September, 1901, William McKinley was assassinated at Buffalo, Mr. Roosevelt assumed the office of President, fitted by his remarkable character, personality, and training to understand the great and varied responsibilities of that high position. There were some who professed to believe that what they called the "impulsiveness and blunt methods" of Roosevelt, would, in a short time, involve the country in a bloody conflict that would shatter the peace of the world, and lead to the ruin of the people. Though unbound by any precedent or pledge, Mr. Roosevelt chose to regard himself merely as the instrument selected to do the things McKinley would have done had he lived. "In this hour of deep and national bereavement," he solemnly declared, "I wish to say that it shall be my aim to continue absolutely unbroken the policy of President McKinley for the peace, prosperity, and honor of our beloved country."

CUBA'S DEBT TO ROOSEVELT.

How that generous vow has been observed the nation knows. In spite of his remarkable individuality, Mr. Roosevelt adjusted himself to the conditions he found, retaining the Cabinet of his predecessor, maintaining harmonious relations with Congress, and applying himself to the execution of the policies McKinley had formulated. He gave independence to Cuba and insured the prosperity of the island by arranging a mutually advantageous treaty of commercial reciprocity; but to prevent the return of anarchy, with its train of evils, injurious not only to the Cuban but to the American people as well, he was compelled four years later to reestablish American occupation. This was done quietly, peacefully, without wound to the keen sensibilities of the Cubans, and it was accompanied by a pledge that evacuation would occur the second time when the natives showed a greater readiness to govern themselves. Alive with gratitude and enthusiasm for the United States in consequence of its liberation of their land from the chains Spain had riveted about it, the first occupation was naturally free from an anti-American movement. The suspicion evoked by the second American occupation, necessary as it was in the interest of the Cubans themselves, could easily have given rise to demonstrations and revolt; but so tactfully has the situation been handled that the Cubans are patiently waiting for the time when the government once more shall be confided to their hands. Had less courtesy and consideration been displayed, the United States to-day would be engaged in the same kind of strife in Cuba that Spain found necessary during the last twenty-five years of her possession. The single compensation the United States has obtained for the unselfish course it has pursued, alike under McKinley and Roosevelt, is Guantanamo Bay, on the south side of the island. A naval station has been established there which commands the Caribbean Sea and enables the Navy more advantageously to protect the southern coast of the United States and the Panama Canal. It is the opinion of European diplomats that the highest statecraft has been displayed in dealing with the Cuban question.

UPBUILDING COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

As in Cuba the President peacefully carried out the policies of McKinley, so in the Philippines he sought to realize the high aims and purposes of the Executive so cruelly slain at Buffalo. Immediately following the suppression of the insurrection, the army occupying the islands was reduced from 67,000 to 15,000 men. Every encouragement was given to the Commission, headed by William H. Taft, now Secretary of War, to establish civil government, with the result that to-day Filipinos fill most of the offices and have their own elective assembly. The work done in the Far Eastern Archipelago belongs to the highest type of constructive statecraft, and Theodore Roosevelt has lost no opportunity to impress upon it the high civic ideals which he has entertained always. Porto Rico, too, has been a subject of the President's attention. The good of the people of that small island has been his object, and the maintenance of peace and the prosperous condition of its inhabitants are testimony of the wisdom of the policy pursued with respect to them.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

For half a century it had been the dream of the American people to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific by means of a ship canal. All of President Roosevelt's predecessors during that period had appreciated the inestimable advantage of such a waterway; many of them recommended that it be undertaken. But both at home and abroad obstacles were placed or found in the way of the enterprise, the former, made up for the most part of railroad interests, which foresaw competition on long hauls and a consequent reduction of freight rates, and the latter due to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 with Great Britain, which prohibited the United States from exclusive control of the waterway. During the Administration of President McKinley Secretary Hay negotiated a treaty abrogating the treaty prohibition, but the Senate declined to ratify without important amendments. Under the Administration of President Roosevelt Secretary Hay negotiated a new treaty, which was ratified twelve days after submission and effectually removed all interference by a foreign power in whatever action this Government might take with respect to the project.

GOOD FAITH OBSERVED.

Then with that energy which characterizes his every move, the President induced Congress to authorize the construction of an Isthmian canal; and when it seemed wise to abandon the Nicaraguan route, he insisted upon American jurisdiction over the Panama Zone, first in the negotiations with Colombia, and then with the independent Republic of Panama, which separated from its mother state. In every step he took the President's course was marked by good faith and disinterested statesmanship, without armed conflict with Colombia and with the general and hearty approval not only of the American people, but of the great states of Central and South America and the powers of the Old World.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE IN PANAMA.

Once the way was paved for construction the President threw himself enthusiastically into the work. The results speak for themselves. The Panama strip, which in the days of French construction was one vast graveyard, is to-day as healthy as the United States. Clean, comfortable quarters have been provided for employees. A railroad system, as unlike the Panama Railroad of days preceding American occupation as the New York Central is to the railroads of forty years ago, has been established, which is used for handling traffic across the Isthmus and to aid in canal construction. The work of digging the canal is proceeding energetically, more than a million cubic yards of dirt being removed monthly, and this amount will be doubled within a very short space of time. Although enormous expenditures, aggregating more than $26,000,000 per year, have been made, there has not been the slightest justification for or hint of charges of graft. It would seem that the visit the President paid to the Canal Zone in 1906, which was so encouraging to every man connected with the enterprise, had imbued all the employees from the chief engineer down to the meanest laborer with that sense of loyalty, zeal, and honesty which is so firmly rooted in the character of their distinguished chief.

SAFEGUARDING THE NATION.

We have seen how peace dominated President Roosevelt's conduct in Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and on the Isthmus. Now let us glance at the relations he has maintained with the great powers of the world. The President is no weakling. Summed up in his own words, the policy which guides him is: "Tread softly, but carry a big stick." The conquest of Spain transformed the United States into a world power. Prior to that time it had been merely a potential force in international affairs. President Roosevelt has made the United States not only a member of the council of nations, but one of the commanding figures of that council. To achieve this notable position, which carries with it respect for American citizens in foreign lands, promotion of American export trade, and protection of the United States and its citizens from insult and ignominy, from treatment, to illustrate, such as China receives, the President strongly advocated reform of the Army and enlargement of the Navy. His experience as a soldier and as Assistant Secretary of the Navy gave him an appreciation of the needs of those services which few other men can possess. To-day, the United States possesses a nucleus of a modern army, around which millions of untrained men may rally. The coast defenses of the United States are in condition to repel assault. A fleet of sixteen modern battle ships and eleven armored cruisers, with their auxiliaries, is about to be organized, and is a weapon for peace which no nation, however powerful, can afford to disregard. Those who recall the pin-prick policy of Japan in the spring of 1907, which magnified minor questions into serious complications, and of the labor agitation on the Pacific coast against the Japanese, which unfortunately is still continuing, are thankful that the foresight and judgment of Theodore Roosevelt have furnished the means which will preserve their beloved country from a bloody and unnecessary war. The American people are not a military people. They are peace-loving. But they realize that to be unarmed and assertive of their rights is to invite disaster. And this realization is responsible for the wholehearted support given by farmer, workman, and professional man alike to the Roosevelt policies of enlargement and improvement of the Army and Navy.

FRIENDS WITH ALL THE WORLD.

More than six years have passed since Mr. Roosevelt gave his promise to continue the policy of his predecessor for the peace of his native land. During that long period the American dogs of war have been held well in hand. Not a ripple has disturbed the surface of our international relations. Germany, Great Britain, and Italy blockaded Venezuela and threatened infringement and even violation of the Monroe Doctrine. President Roosevelt induced these powers to raise the blockade and to reenter upon peaceful relations with the South American Republic. When his Administration began, he found the relations between the United States and Germany strained. To-day those relations are most cordial, Germany losing no opportunity to manifest its good will and friendship for the great American nation. Tired of the conditions which existed in Santo Domingo, Europe determined to intervene, with a view to securing greater protection for its interests and payment for debts acknowledged and unpaid. To-day the disorder of that island has been replaced by order; a revolutionary government has been succeeded by a stable government; arrangements have been made for the prompt payment of all debts, and an era of prosperity and civilization stretches out before the people of that unhappy land. Venezuela and Santo Domingo furnished opportunities for the reassertion and strengthening of the Monroe Doctrine, and caused general recognition of the position of the United States as a just and disinterested arbiter in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere.

THE GREAT RUSSO-JAPANESE PEACE PACT.

But events were to show that the United States was not merely entitled to respect as the determining factor in American questions. The slow, silent advance of Russia toward the unfrozen Pacific, its domination of Manchuria, and its purpose to acquire Korea provoked Japan to war. President Roosevelt's first move was to proclaim and enforce American neutrality; his second, one most beneficent to humanity at large, to restrict the theater of military operations to Manchuria and Korea. Had the belligerents been allowed to conduct their military operations wherever in China they pleased, the vast Empire would have become the prey of every nation, and a world war would have been precipitated. As it was, there was constant danger that Chinese territory would be invaded and occupied and other countries drawn into the Russo-Japanese struggle. The President, therefore, constantly sought a means to arrange peace, making his overtures so tactfully that neither belligerent could feel offended nor rebuff the United States, and at last through his efforts he brought their plenipotentiaries face to face, and, in spite of hostility, mistrust, and disagreement, created a world sentiment which forced them to sign a treaty of peace. Thus China was preserved intact, and the United States successfully had maintained the principles of the Integrity of and the "open door" in that Empire. At the time the President was arranging the preliminaries of the Russo-Japanese peace, the Morocco question threatened to disturb European relations, and here again Mr. Roosevelt exercised his powers of right doing and brought about a European concert with regard to that benighted land.

A MAN OF PEACE.

History will term Theodore Roosevelt a man of peace and not a man of war. It will not only recount his achievements with regard to Venezuela, Santo Domingo, Morocco, and the Russo-Japanese war, but it will note the arbitration of the Alaskan boundary question which resulted in the recognition of American claims; the steps he took to establish stability in Central America and to preserve the Republics to the south of us from European collection of debts by force; the arrangement he made to increase the prestige of those Republics by securing their participation in The Hague conferences; the permanence he gave The Hague arbitration tribunal, through the reference to it of certain phases of the Venezuelan dispute, and the encouragement and support he extended which is assisting it to realize the lofty purposes for which it was established; and finally the promotion of more intimate relations between the Pan-American States, with arbitration of all differences as their basis. It is a record which sheds luster upon the American people; and they owe their new glory to the energy and courage of the President.

THE SANCTITY OF THE HOME.

Turn now to the domestic achievements of the President. There, too, we see that nicely balanced exercise of right, of the enforcement of the "square deal." Mr. Roosevelt knows his country and his countrymen. Born and bred in New York, educated in New England, plainsman in the West, he came in contact with all the people and gained an insight into the resources of the land. He knew the needs of the former, the extent and possibilities of the latter. A home lover himself, he fanatically believes in the preservation of the home. Possessing those virtues recognized as belonging to the truest type of manhood, a model husband, a tender father, he has not shrunk from using his influence in behalf of decency and of impressing upon his fellow-citizens the plain duty of providing their country with sound, healthy sons and daughters to carry it on to that splendid future which the past and present promise for it. There has been no cavil or cant about the President's expressions. Seven years before he entered the White House he proclaimed them to the world, and he did it then as he did it when at the head of the nation, because he believed that when the capacity and desire for fatherhood and motherhood are lost the race goes down, and should go down.

MORAL, MENTAL, AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

The greatest patriots are the mothers from whose wombs spring the sons to develop in peace or to defend in war their common land; and maternity has been reverenced in all ages and in all civilizations. In both their mental, physical, and moral make-up the President has been solicitous that American youth shall attain a high standard. He has preached the doctrine of education not alone for the benefit of the individual, but because he believes a thoroughly efficient system of education comes next to the influence of patriotism in making the nation great. The Federal Government is estopped by States rights from promoting such a system, but the President has advocated the most advanced legislation that wisely can be enacted for the District of Columbia, believing it will set an example to the States. A sportsman himself, the President believes in clean sport, and he has encouraged competitive games between the Military and Naval Academies and has followed with deep interest and given an impetus to the elimination of brutality from football.

RESCUING HOMES FROM THIEVES.

While Mr. Roosevelt has been limited to words in promoting private morality, he has been able, through the exercise of administrative power and the assistance of Congress in enacting proper laws, to fortify the home and to aid the home builder. He has rescued millions upon millions of acres of the public domain from the rapacious grip of influential thieves, and has dedicated them to the homeless. He is responsible for the reclamation policy, which is irrigating arid lands and draining swamps. The irrigation projects now under way will add 6,468,000 acres to the crop-producing land of the United States. Comparing this enormous area with that under cultivation, it is estimated the value of farm crops will be increased annually by $120,000,000; the taxable property of the people by at least $500,000,000, and homes will be furnished to almost 300,000 families. There are over 60,000,000 acres of swamp or overflowed land in the United States, and if it were possible to reclaim 25,000,000 acres, as the President hopes, the land values of the country would be increased by more than $2,500,000,000 and the crop values by more than $750,000,000. Subdividing this enormous area into 40-acre farms, 1,250,000 families would be supplied with homes. If his successors carry on the policy President Roosevelt has inaugurated in this connection, there will be no crowding of the United States for many long years, however prolific American parents or however great the tide of immigration coming to our shores.

HONESTY THE ROOSEVELT SLOGAN.

Public and civic morality has been recognized as one of the corner stones of the Roosevelt Administration. The President has demanded that the servants of the people be honest. He has no temper for fraud or wrongdoing. In spite of the clamor of politicians, he cleaned out the Post-Office Department. He renovated, also, the other Executive Departments. He ruthlessly removed district attorneys, marshals, and other officials who gave aid to or placed obstacles in the way of the prosecution of land or other thieves. He gave his countenance, though he could not give his assistance, to the movements to provide States and municipalities with clean administrations. At his instance Congress passed a law prohibiting contributions by corporations and national banks to campaign funds. Honesty, honesty, honesty, has been and is the President's unceasing cry, and it has reverberated in all sections and given impetus to that great moral regeneration, the influence of which has been felt both at home and in foreign lands.

ROOSEVELT A CONSTRUCTIVE STATESMAN.

President Roosevelt has not been merely reformatory; he has been constructive. His Administration has witnessed the organization of a new Executive Department—that of Commerce and Labor—the creation of a service for the protection and development of the forests, the reorganization of the consular corps, and the establishment of the foundation for industrial peace, which is intended to facilitate the settlement of disputes between labor and capital. The foundation was made possible through the award to the President of the Nobel peace prize for his services in terminating the Russo-Japanese war. But the piece of constructive work for which Mr. Roosevelt will long be known is in connection with governmental supervision of the railroads. In enforcing the law against rate discrimination by railroads in favor of large shippers, and in compelling the passage of a new law to enable proper regulation of railroad rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the President dealt a blow to one of the greatest evils in connection with industrial combinations and insured equal treatment for the small with the large shipper. This law was not enacted without one of the most bitter legislative struggles the country has ever seen, the forces arrayed against it being the railroad and certain corporate interests, which lost no opportunity to prevent or nullify the President's purpose. But backed by an overwhelming sentiment, a bill meeting with the President's approval was placed on the statute books, and it is being enforced judiciously and fairly and has given results which to-day are as satisfactory to the railroads as they are to the people.

BUILDING UP THE NATION'S WEALTH.

It is a positive pleasure to describe the effect of the policies of President Roosevelt. Every man, woman, and child in the country has enjoyed throughout his Administration the luxuries which accompany an abounding prosperity. Had the President been as mischievously inclined as his enemies would have us believe, it would not have been difficult for him, with the immense power his office affords, to have embarked upon a course which long ago would have brought disaster. As it is, the President, by his determination to make honesty and decency triumphant, has been more conservative than the men who claim to be conservative, but really are reactionary. During the past six years—

Commerce has increased by $1,057,000,000.
Manufactures have increased by $2,000,000,000.
Crops have increased by $2,058,000,000.
Transportation by rail increased by 500,000,000 tons.
Transportation on the Great Lakes increased by 30,500,000 tons.
So much for the prosperity of the country generally.
Now as to the effect upon the individual:

WHAT THE INDIVIDUAL HAS GAINED.

Unfortunately the industrial statistics available are only those of the Census Bureau for 1900 and 1905. Yet they give a fair idea of the effect of the Roosevelt policies.

They show that:

"The number of industrial establishments in those five years, four with Roosevelt as President, increased by 8,700.

"The capital employed increased by $3,700,000,000.

"The number of salaried officials and clerks in industrial establishments increased by 155,000.

"The salaries of salaried officials and clerks in industrial establishments increased by $190,000,000.

"The average number of wage-earners increased by 609,000.

"The total wages paid increased by $602,000,000.

"The value of products of all the establishments increased by $3,400,000,000."

ASK YOURSELF.

But, after all, the easiest way to determine the effect of Roosevelt and the Roosevelt policies is to consult yourself:

"Do you earn more now than you did in 1901?

"While the cost of living has increased, do you not enjoy more luxuries to-day than you did in 1901? In other words, do you not live better?"

THE POOR MAN POORER ABROAD.

Glancing for a moment at the official statistics of the different countries in Europe, we find:

That the increase in the wages of labor has not kept pace with the increase in the prices of food and other necessities.

In other words, the poor man in Europe is poorer than ever.

THANKSGIVING OF THE FARMER.

Now let us turn to the condition of the farmers.

In five years the value of our farm real estate increased almost $7,600,000,000.

In five years the value of domestic animals increased more than $1,000,000,000.

In five years, then, the farmer's total capital, as composed of domestic animals, other live stock, and implements and machinery, increased by at least $8,600,000,000.

During the last seven years the farmers have produced an amount of wealth that has made them more prosperous than the farmers of any country of any age.

The value of their products in 1901 was $5,300,000,000. In 1907 it was $7,358,000,000, an increase of $2,058,000,000.

PROSPERITY OF THE FARMER.

What has been the effect of this tremendous prosperity upon the farmer?

His standard of living has risen.
He has become a traveler.
He has his telephone, his daily mail, and his newspaper.
He is debt-free.
He has money in the bank, or his promissory note is good.

ADVANTAGES TO POSTERITY.

Thus we see the wageworker, the salaried industrialist, and the farmer increasingly benefited during the years President Roosevelt has been at the head of the nation. We know also that the shipper no longer suffers from barefaced discriminatory methods, and that the small dealer stands a better chance in competition with the powerful corporation. The general practice of giving and receiving railroad discrimination never has been so curtailed as is the case to-day. We find that our food has been made more healthful, our drink purer, our medicines freed from adulterations. We see more careful scrutiny of immigration. We see action taken to conserve our mineral resources. Wherever the need, there the President has acted; and not only the present, but all future generations will enjoy the fruits of his wise policies.

THE FORESTRY POLICY.

Let us glance for a moment at the steps taken by President Roosevelt to conserve our natural resources. The national forest policy as it now exists has taken shape during the present Administration. On October 1, 1901, the area of the Government's forests, then under the administration of the Department of the Interior, was only 46,153,119 acres. To-day, six years later, the national forests have an aggregate area of 160,000,000. The year before the consolidation of the Government's forest work the income from the use of the resources of the national forests amounted to $59,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30 last the proceeds amounted to more than $1,530,000. These figures show that the great areas in the national forests have been brought to a condition where they are beginning to serve the purposes of the West. The conservation of timber and forage through wise use and the protection of stream flow is the only insurance of many industries which have contributed materially to the prosperity of the country.

THE FORAGE CROP.

The forage crop of the 160,000,000 acres of national forests supports cattle, horses, sheep, and goats which pay into the pockets of Western stockmen in profits something like $10,000,000 annually. The annual timber crop which these forests are capable of producing would be worth, on the stump, at present prices, perhaps $10,000,000 more, and probably ten times this amount when prepared for market. In many regions the national forests are the only guaranty that the user of wood will be able, in the future, to get it at any price.

By the wise use of the enormous resources of these forests, which, under the operation of the land laws would, but for their withdrawal from entry by Presidential proclamation, now be almost wholly in private hands with only nominal compensation to the public, they can be made, so to speak, to develop themselves. Without their conservation and development, there is not a form of human activity that would not, at some future time, suffer hardship.

THE MAJESTY OF THE LAW AND EQUAL JUSTICE FOR THE RICH AND POOR.

To President Roosevelt, the law is law. As a citizen, it is his duty to obey it; as the Chief Magistrate of the nation, it is his duty to enforce it. A man's wealth or a man's poverty makes no difference in his view, so far as the law is concerned. The fact that a special interest is powerful and rich is no reason why it should be excepted from the operation of the law. The fact that the men comprising that special interest have attained prominence and wealth and possess political and social prestige and influence is no reason why they should be excepted from the operation of the law. Similarly, the labor organization is amenable to the law, and the labor leader can not expect it to be contracted or expanded for his benefit. The President emphatically believes that if the people express their will, it is incumbent upon their servants to give that expression effect. If the law be inadequate, it can be amended; if obnoxious to the general welfare, enforcement will cause its prompt repeal.

CHANGED CONDITIONS REQUIRE NEW LAWS.

To a man so constituted, it was impossible to do otherwise than to enforce the law. When his administration first began, he was asked what action should be taken respecting charges against a United States Senator. His answer was: "Enforce the law, no matter how high or how low it may hit, and enforce it impartially." At the same time the President recognized that new social problems had appeared as a result of the tremendous and highly complex industrial development which the nation had enjoyed. The old laws and the old customs, which had almost the binding force of law, were once quite sufficient to regulate the accumulation and distribution of wealth. But having become inadequate to meet the changed conditions, it was imperative they should be improved. To insure proper legislation, which should not be harmful to the delicate mechanism of modern business, it was above all essential that an accurate knowledge of these conditions should be had. History has established that legislation inspired by hatred and fear and undertaken in ignorance is always unwise and ineffective. The President desired that calm inquiry should be made to establish what abuses existed, and then that the measures needed to correct them should be enacted in a spirit of sober self-restraint. No one appreciated more than he that crude and ill-considered legislation, which might turn out to be bad, created a risk of national disaster; and in his judgment it was preferable to do nothing than to run such risk.

CORRECTING THE ABUSES.

The six years of President Roosevelt's Administration have witnessed the enactment of Federal laws dealing with corporations and railroads and the development of a public opinion which have gone far to correct the grave abuses the President found when he assumed office. John D. Rockefeller and the other Standard Oil magnates could not, with success, carry on in cynical scorn of the rights of the people, the outrageous and oppressive operations which have made their trust so powerful. Edward H. Harriman would not dare to exploit to-day another railroad property as he did the Chicago and Alton. Yet both Rockefeller and Harriman have sneered at the reform policies of the President. Rockefeller's agents placed the Standard Oil above the Government. The creature had become more powerful than its creator. Harriman, having ascertained the limitation of existing law, conducted his indefensible speculative operations in the belief that he was safe from governmental prosecution. Apparently, both the Standard and Harriman believed in observing the law, but only in so far as necessary to avoid the penalties it imposed.

CREATING A MODERN MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Inspired by just such operations as those of Harriman and his ilk, others, perhaps less shrewd, but equally callous and corrupt, embarked upon schemes which approached as near common swindling as high finance ever does. Corporations were organized, the capital of which ranged from five to fifty millions dollars, while the actual cash on hand with which to commence business was acknowledged to be only $1,000 in each case. These corporations included everything from an invention which might be useful to a mine which might contain gold and frequently did not exist. The wonderful prosperity of the country fully justified expansion, but not inflation or swindling. And it was fortunate there was a man like Mr. Roosevelt at the head of the nation strong enough to turn on the light and expose conditions favorable to the formation of another Mississippi bubble. Had not the public become aware of the dishonest practices which were being perpetrated by men who presumably were entitled to national respect and confidence, undoubtedly the reign of George Law would have had repetition and the United States would have become involved in a financial crash of great magnitude.

LIGHT AND DARKNESS IN FINANCE.

President Roosevelt believes in publicity. Here again he is directly opposed to the Rockefeller-Harriman type. Mr. Roosevelt has never had anything to conceal. What deception Rockefeller found necessary in the organization and development of the Standard Oil trust! What practices Mr. Harriman stooped to in order to accomplish the schemes constantly revolving in his mind! In what pits of darkness these high financiers worked overtime. Mr. Roosevelt holds that the honest corporation has nothing to fear from publicity; that there is no reason to spare the dishonest corporation. The beef trust, tobacco trust, and sugar trust interposed every possible obstacle in the way of governmental inspection of their books. Why? The Standard Oil Company absolutely declined to aid the Bureau of Corporations, which President Roosevelt organized, in the inquiry instituted into its affairs.

The report of the Bureau establishes potent reasons for this defiant attitude. Mr. Harriman hampered the investigation of the Interstate Commerce Commission into the situation he created through the merger of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific and his manipulation of the Chicago and Alton and other properties, and went so far as to refuse to answer certain questions. The report of the Commission makes it clear why he considered himself impelled to adopt this course. The Government has begun legal proceedings to force him to furnish it with the information desired.

MONOPOLY DESTRUCTIVE TO LIBERTY.

There is nothing so inimical to liberty as monopoly. Its existence controls wages, fixes selling prices, indeed determines every condition of life since it may employ or discharge, reward or punish, as suits its fancy. It crushes independence, destroys initiative, and fetters progress. It leads to crime, as witness smuggling in those countries where government monopolies obtain, and it provokes a sensitive, proud people to revolt.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE ANTITRUST LAW.

The Sherman antitrust law specifically prohibits combinations in restraint of trade. It contains provisions for civil action to dissolve an offending corporation. It contains also a provision for the punishment of the men guilty of restraining trade. It has been alleged that there are no combinations which violate this law. The statute was approved on July 2, 1890. During the Administration of President Harrison, three combinations found to infringe the law were judiciously dissolved. Three were ordered dissolved during the Administration of President Cleveland. Two injunctions were granted while President McKinley was in the White House. Five years of President Roosevelt's Administration witnessed the institution of twelve bills in equity, of which six were granted; thirteen indictents, of which three resulted in indictments and nine are pending, and two convictions for contempt for refusal to testify before a grand jury.

MONOPOLIES CONTROL PRICES.

It is the earnest effort of defenders of monopolistic combinations to demonstrate that the prices of commodities in general consumption depend absolutely upon the natural law of supply and demand. Of course the combinations have assisted the law wherever declines have occurred, but no, no never, are they responsible for increases. Mr. Rockefeller admitted that combinations may be formed for speculation in stocks rather than for conducting business, and that for this purpose prices might be temporarily raised rather than lowered. Yet Mr. Rockefeller's trust used its monopoly power to compel producers to sell at the prices dictated and to extort excessive prices from consumers. The heads of other trusts, who have been less cautious in their utterances than Mr. Rockefeller, admit that the result of the formation of their combinations was reduction of prices paid to the producers and increase of prices made to the consumers.

THE STANDARD GREATEST OF ALL TRUSTS.

The greatest of all trusts, so far as investigation to date has shown, is the Standard Oil Company. This company with its affiliated concerns refines and sells fully 85 per cent of the illuminating oil, naphtha, and lubricating oil made and sold in the United States. It transports more than 90 per cent of the crude oil transported through pipe lines in the principal oil fields. In large sections of the country there is practically no independent oil sold, the Standard's own estimate of its proportion of the business exceeding 95 per cent.

PROFITS OF THE STANDARD.

The Standard has used its monopoly power to extort unreasonable profits. Its profits in 1903 were over $81,000,000 on a capital of about $98,000,000. The profits in that year constitute nearly 40 per cent of the total investment of the company as carried on its books. During five years the average increase in the price of oil was about 2 cents per gallon. The Standard's sales of petroleum products in the United States amount to about 1,400,000,000 gallons annually. The increased rate represents an enormous and altogether unwarranted increase in profits. Mr. Rockefeller could afford to be philanthropic and to distribute, as he has done, something like $150,000,000 "for the benefit of his countrymen."

REBATES AS AIDS TO MONOPOLIES.

It has been established beyond doubt that the greatest aid to the development of huge combinations was the rebate. Not only did the railroads grant them to favored shippers, but it was a common device of combinations for maintaining prices to sell goods to wholesale dealers, granting them after a certain period a rebate, provided such wholesalers failed to sell the goods at less than fixed prices. But the railroads were the chief offenders in this respect. It was a matter of the most common knowledge that railroad officials upon slight salaries and in a very few years amassed considerable fortunes, because it was within their power, by giving slight concessions in rates, directly or indirectly, to determine the fortune of any industry, whether it should prosper or fail. In numerous cases rebates over great sections of the country averaged upon the product of largest movement from 10 to 40 per cent of the published rates. Such advantages were given to those who could compel them by the large volume of traffic which they could control or to those with whom the railroad or its officials were intimately identified in interest.

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACIES.

Such practices inevitably led to the growth and prosperity beyond normal bounds of the industries so favored and to the utter destruction and bankruptcy of those industries to which such advantages were not extended; and, indeed, it is the judgment of those who have made investigations into the rise of some of our most potent and pernicious industrial combinations that they were alone made possible by a criminal copartnership with our interstate common carriers. So long as the railroads might extend one rate to one shipper and another rate to a competing shipper neither capital nor labor was free to seek those lines which offered the greatest return, for under such conditions the man of wealth and enterprise, together with the workman of intelligence and skill, were alike dependent upon the benevolence or malevolence of railroad officials.

RAILROADS ARE GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

It is, therefore, not without justifications to say that one of the real accomplishments of President Roosevelt has been the putting in motion of those forces which have led to a change of railroad policy affecting so intimately the industrial life of the nation. Railroads are highways. The right to use the highways is a political right—fundamental and inalienable—which springs from the very nature and necessities of social order. It differs altogether from contract rights, which rest wholly upon mutual and voluntary agreement. The railroad, therefore, is not a private enterprise, but, in fact and in law, an agency of government for performing a public service of the highest utility. The right to use its facilities is primary and inherent, and the very essence of that right is equality and reasonableness of conduct and charges.

SECURING REASONABLE AND JUST RATES.

The right of the public to rates that are reasonable and relatively just measures the duty of the carrier, and that duty is no longer questioned even by the railroads. The question that faced the President was how the performance of this conceded duty could be secured. Obviously not by fixing rates by direct legislation. That method was plainly impracticable. Indeed, its use by certain States has provoked much adverse comment and is regarded by many as the principal cause of present disturbed business conditions. But, granting the feasibility of fixing State rates in this way, no one pretends that the Congress should undertake to deal directly with the vast and complicated network of interstate rates. On the other hand, it seemed evident that railway managers should not be the sole judges of the reasonableness of their own rates, nor the final arbiters of the just relation of rates as between different localities and different articles of traffic. Some authority there surely should be, superior to and independent of the carrying corporations, to investigate their schedules, prevent unjust exactions, and equalize so far as might be the burdens of transportation.

THE MEANS TO CORRECT ABUSES.

The plan adopted was for Congress to define the principles or rules of conduct which the carrier should observe, and to authorize an administrative tribunal to inquire and decide, after full hearing, whether particular rates and practices, of which complaint was made, do or do not conform to the established standard, and if such complaint be well founded to prescribe the lawful rates and practices to be substituted for the future in place of those condemned.

RAILROADS NOT IN GOVERNMENT'S HANDS.

This is the method or plan of regulation under the existing statute, including the amendments of 1906. Let those who condemn this method propose one more likely to protect the rights of both the railroads and the public or better suited to promote relations of mutual justice. To say that such a scheme of regulation is "fixing railroad rates" and "places the railroads in the hands of the Government" is to make a wild and baseless assertion, which finds no excuse in the theory of the law or the results of its administration. On the contrary, experience shows that its provisions are sound and wholesome and that its operation tends strongly to enforce fair dealing by the railroads and at the same time to sustain the value of railroad property.

NEED OF THE LAW.

To say that such a measure was "absolutely superfluous" because there has been a return of only 4 per cent upon the "modest capitalization" (!) of American railroads, is a non sequitur so obvious as not to admit of argument. The statement may be accepted as to aggregate capital and average earnings, but it manifestly does not follow that some roads are not overcapitalized, and that some or many rates are not excessive and discriminatory. Indeed, the evident purpose of this law is not to reduce rates generally, but to reach and correct the particular instances of departure from the standard of reasonableness and relative justice. It has already been amply vindicated, and its benefit will be more apparent as time goes on.

DEBT OWING TO MEN WHO DO.

It has never been President Roosevelt's policy to strike at a man of wealth because he possessed wealth. Socialists and demagogues have advised him to aim all his shot at capital; the money kings have urged him to enforce the law and to secure legislation only in their interest. He appreciated that prosperity could never be created by law alone, although it could be easily destroyed by mischievous laws, or that law could guard us against the consequences of our own folly. When he assumed office he knew that the men who are idle or credulous, the men who seek gain not by genuine work, but by gambling in any form, are a source of menace not only to themselves, but to the people generally. The President recognized the great debt the people owe to those captains of industry who drove railroad systems across the country, and he believed also in leaving as unhampered as compatible with the public good those strong and forceful men upon whom the success of business operations depends. But while favoring ample and full returns for these men, he will not permit, if he can help it, a policy of exploiting the many for the benefit of the few, and as far as he can he will punish the man who cares nothing for the property after the speculative deal in its securities has closed. With wealth honestly gained and honestly employed the President has not and never has had any quarrel. Such wealth deserves and receives his entire approbation. But fortunes gained dishonestly and employed dishonestly constitute menaces to the people, and their owners must be dealt with by the Government.

HARRIMAN NOT A RAILROAD BUILDER.

E. H. Harriman is a railroad financier, not a railroad constructor. For nearly seven years he has been in absolute control of the Union and Southern Pacific systems, and in all that time he has built no new line of railroad, excepting a few small feeders, a coast-line connection in California, and the line now under construction running out of the United States into Mexico. Contrasted with the work which James J. Hill did in the Northwest, where he built a transcontinental line without Government aid and through a virgin territory, the greater part of which was not only uninhabited, but thought incapable of habitation at the time of the initiation of his enterprise, whatever Mr. Harriman has done in the line of construction is inconsequential. His policy has been to stop new railroad building, or if this was not possible to secure control of the new road.

HOLD-UP TACTICS OF HARRIMAN.

When Senator Clark, of Montana, projected a railroad running from Salt Lake to Los Angeles, Mr. Harriman, by court injunctions and other methods, put a stop to the work of construction and only permitted it to continue when he was allowed a one-half interest in the enterprise and a traffic agreement for ninety-nine years with the Southern Pacific road. When the Santa Fe Company planned to extend its lines from the forest country in northern California to connect with its main line at San Francisco Bay, Mr. Harriman again compelled connection with lines which he owned himself, placing the new road under a joint management.

WHERE HARRIMAN'S GENIUS PLAYS.

It is as a railroad financier and manipulator that Mr. Harriman's genius has been exhibited. He looks at railroads from the Wall street standpoint. He knows the game as played in the great money market of the United States and years ago forsook his previous occupation of buying and selling the stocks and bonds issued by other men and himself undertook to utter those securities in which Wall street speculates.

THE CHICAGO AND ALTON SCANDAL.

The first considerable enterprise with which Mr. Harriman's name has been identified is the exploitation of the Chicago and Alton, the history of which, as said by the Interstate Commerce Commission, "is rich in illustrations of various methods of indefensible financing." Some of the methods used are set forth in the report of the Commission in these words:

"First came the profit to the stockholders arising out of the sale to themselves of $32,000,000 of bonds at 65, which sold for several succeeding years for 82½ to 94. Second came the 30 per cent dividend based on amounts expended from income for improvements, much of it nearly thirty years before, and recently capitalized. Third came the pseudo transfer to Stanton, and his contract under which the new company paid $10,000,000 in cash for preferred stock which had cost less than $7,000,000. Fourth came the conversion of 183,224 shares of common stock in the railroad company into 195,428 shares of common stock plus 194,890 shares of the preferred stock in the railway company, part of which was sold to the Union Pacific at 86½ a share. Fifth came the sale of the St. Louis, Peoria and Northern for $3,000,000 cash. Sixth came whatever interest the syndicate may have had in the sale to Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of $22,000,000 of bonds at 60 cents on the dollar. Seventh came the fee of $100,000 to Mr. Harriman for financing the enterprise. This analysis is no doubt incomplete, but it is suggestive."

GAINING CONTROL OF THE UNION PACIFIC.

The striking success achieved by Mr. Harriman in this transaction no doubt led to his early preeminence in the affairs of the Union Pacific immediately following its reorganization. No man has ever been more fortunate in gaining possession of a great railroad at an opportune time than was Mr. Harriman in his advent into the railroad world. He came, after a long period of depression, into possession of properties which were the main arteries for the traffic of great sections of the country. He could not have destroyed these properties if he had wished to do so. The country was just entering upon the greatest period of prosperity which any land in all the world's history has ever seen.

WHAT PROSPERITY DID FOR HARRIMAN.

The only embarrassment which Mr. Harriman has found in the management of these properties has not been that of securing traffic upon which he could pay dividends, but that of moving the traffic which was offered him and with the creation of which he had absolutely nothing to do. The considerable betterments which have been put into his roads, most of which had been projected by Mr. C. P. Huntington and Mr. Leland Stanford, were forced upon the Harriman lines because of their inability to handle the great volume of business that was pressed upon them, an inability which still obtains.

HARRIMAN'S STOCK ISSUES IN THE UNION PACIFIC.

Mr. Harriman's fondness for stock issues was early exhibited in his control of the Union Pacific by the issuance of $100,000,000 of convertible bonds, and here began the evidence of an expanding ambition. The Union Pacific, when it came out of the hands of receivers, was but 1,800 miles long. It was a trunk line, and occupied the most important strategic position held by any railroad in the Far West. Why not bring all competitors under its domination? Nothing stood in the way of carrying out such purpose excepting a lack of funds.

THE SCHEME TO GAIN RAILROAD CONTROL.

The syndicate which bought the Union Pacific was not prepared for any such gigantic enterprise, nor did Mr. Harriman contemplate that their own funds should be used in this manner. They could mortgage the Union Pacific to buy one piece of road, and mortgage that second piece of road to buy another piece of road, and so continue this chain until all of the roads tapping the great territory from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and from Puget Sound to Mexico were under one control. Again we quote from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

"That it is only the law which prevents the concentration into Mr. Harriman's hands of every line lying between Canada and Mexico is the frank admission of Mr. Harriman himself, made at the hearing. Questioned by the Commission as to where his policy of acquisition was to stop, Mr. Harriman said:

"'A. I would go on with it. If I thought we could realize something more than we have got from these investments I would go on and buy some more things.

"'Q. Supposing that you got the Sante Fe?

"'A. You would not let us get it.

"'Q. How could we help it?

"'A. How could you help it? I think you would bring out your power to enforce the conditions of the Sherman anti-trust act pretty quick. If you will let us, I will go and take the Santa Fe to-morrow.

"'Q. You would take it to-morrow?

"'A. Why, certainly I would; I would not have any hesitation; it is a pretty good property.

"'Q. Then it is only the restriction of the law that keeps you from taking it?

"'A. I would go on as long as I live.

"'Q. Then, after you had gotten through with the Santa Fe and had taken it, you would also take the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, if you could get them?

"'A. If you would let me.

"'Q. And your power, which you have, would gradually increase as you took one road after another, so that you might spread not only over the Pacific coast, but spread out over the Atlantic coast?

"'A. Yes.'

"To gather under one head all existing transcontinental lines, or as many as possible, and to exclude the incoming of all competitors, became manifestly the Harriman policy, which was inaugurated in 1901 by the issuance of $100,000,000 of convertible bonds by the Union Pacific. With the proceeds of these bonds the Union Pacific purchased control of the Southern Pacific Company, and a majority of the outstanding stock of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which latter incidentally carried with it control of one-half of the stock of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway Company, the stock of which had been purchased jointly by the Northern Pacific and Great Northern companies and their collateral trust bonds issued therefor. Possession of these lines would have given to the Union Pacific absolute mastery over every avenue leading to the Pacific coast within the United States save that afforded by the Great Northern Railroad on the northern border of the country, and that offered by the Santa Fe upon the southern. This plan, if executed, would have subjected to a common will and policy nearly one-half of the territory of the United States—a comparatively undeveloped, rapidly growing, and extremely rich territory, into which must necessarily extend the population and business of the Eastern States."

THE HARRIMAN IDEA.

Mr. Harriman sought to make this territory his own, a vast Harriman plantation, over which he would be master, but the complaint of his people is that he does not recognize the obligations of the landlord. He builds no new lines and joins in the building of no new lines unless other competitors first undertake such construction. The State of Nevada he treated as a means of ingress to California, a mere bridge, until others with enterprise made tributary to his own line the vast mineral deposits and rapidly growing communities in that territory. He has planned for a railroad from the Columbia River to Puget Sound, into the territory occupied by the Hill roads, and has left undeveloped nearly 50,000 square miles in eastern Oregon and southern Idaho. He has taken the money raised from the sale of bonds secured by mortgage of western roads, and upon which the traffic of that territory pays the interest, to gamble in the securities of far distant systems.

PLAYING THE WALL STREET GAME.

Harriman's policies have not been based upon public need, nor have they been rich in anticipation of the future. He has played the Wall street game and played it with a master's hand; but he has always been a manipulator only, who uses to his profit whatever others have created; a financier who supplied an eager market with securities, sometimes of certain and sometimes of problematical value.

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE.

No one loves the man whom he fears. No criminal applauds the judge who justly punishes. Those financiers who have been guilty of indefensible practices injurious to the people could not understand the "meddling propensities" of the President in behalf of the people. For instance, take the Roosevelt policy with respect to the great strike in the anthracite field in Pennsylvania. The same owners resented governmental action, because, forsooth, they regarded it as interference with their private business. They paid no heed to the prospect of suffering from cold and hunger which faced the people unable to obtain at the usual prices the coal they required. What they wanted was a President who would dispatch troops into the disaffected districts and by use of their weapons compel the miners to return to work under the harsh conditions they imposed. President Cleveland sent troops to Chicago in 1893 not to supplement or supersede the authority of the State of Illinois in suppressing riot and public disorder, but to protect Federal property, prevent obstruction in the carrying of the mails, prevent interference with interstate commerce and to enforce the decrees and mandates of the Federal courts.

THE CHICAGO RIOTS.

None of the causes leading to the dispatch of Federal troops to Chicago in 1893 arose during the anthracite strike, 1903. In the latter case there was no attempt to injure or destroy Federal property; there was no effort to obstruct the carrying of the United States mails; there was no interference with railroad property affecting interstate commerce; and there was no resistance to the enforcement of the decrees and mandates of the Federal courts. There was at no time a request from the State authorities of Pennsylvania for assistance in preserving law and order. Had Federal troops under these circumstances been dispatched into Pennsylvania to police the anthracite regions, President Roosevelt would have been among the first to cry out against any such usurpation of the prerogatives of the State of Pennsylvania or any such unwarranted and unlawful use of the military power of the Federal Government.

The only similarity between the situation in Chicago in 1893 and that in the anthracite region in 1903 was in the arbitrary and arrogant attitude assumed in both cases by the employers of labor.

FORCE A LAST RESORT.

Public order is always to be maintained, and riot must be put down with a ready and unsparing hand; but it must not be forgotten that this is done primarily in the public interest. But when in anticipation of an outbreak, any group of men appeal to the public authority for armed support, merely to enable them to conduct a quasi-public business in any manner they see fit, the public authorities are entirely within their rights if they insist that such applicants for armed assistance shall have displayed a spirit of fair dealing and shall have exhausted all reasonable and peaceful means to prevent the bringing about of public disorder.

LESSONS OF THE COAL STRIKE.

The action of President Roosevelt in compelling a settlement of the coal strike by arbitration established one of the most valuable precedents of recent years. It brought an era of peace and prosperity to the anthracite coal region of Pennsylvania; and the report of the commission appointed by the President and the machinery it established for preserving peace have met with practically the universal approval alike of wage-earners and employers throughout the United States. The course of the President met such universal approval that it practically put an end to that arrogant attitude on the part of large employers which in controversies of this kind refused to recognize that either their employees or the general public had any rights demanding consideration.

PEACE FOR LABOR AND CAPITAL.

President Roosevelt has never lost an occasion to provide the means and to enforce them, provided he could do so constitutionally, to harmonize the differences between capital and labor. In his first annual message as in his last annual message, the same thought has run, like a white thread on a black coat. The President believes in combination of capital, of the kind which on the whole is a benefit to the public. He believes it is often necessary, and where not necessary it is yet often wise, that there should be organization of labor in order to better secure the rights of the individual wageworker. To the capitalistic combination as to the labor union, the President feels that encouragement should be given so long as the former does no harm to the general public and so long as the latter is conducted with a due and decent regard for the rights of others. When any labor union seeks improper ends or seeks to achieve proper ends by improper means, all good citizens and more especially all honorable public servants must oppose the wrongdoing as resolutely as they would oppose the wrongdoing of any great corporation.

CHARACTER AND GOOD LAWS.

The President has repeatedly stated that the one fundamental fact to remember is that the character of the average man, whether he be a man of means or a man who works with his hands, is the most important factor in solving aright the problems of capital and labor. But as he himself has said, it is almost equally important to remember that without good laws it is also impossible to reach the proper solution. Pressure by the President resulted in the amendment of the employers' liability law and an enactment diminishing the hours of work of railroad employees. He enforced the eight-hour law on Government work. Up to December, 1906, what is known as the Erdman Act, passed in 1898, providing for mediation in disputes between common carriers and their employees had never been invoked. In one year the railroads of the country have repeatedly appealed for its use. The President considers the creation of a board for compulsory investigation of important industrial controversies in cases where mediation fails and arbitration is rejected the next step in a progressive programme, and he has so advised Congress.

THE PACKING HOUSE SCANDAL.

Another instance of "meddling" by the President is found in his investigation of the packing house industry and his correction of evils discovered therein. The country has not yet forgotten the disclosure of insanitary conditions existing in these packing houses; and the details are too nauseous to repeat. In the face of the most determined and bitter opposition the President forced the passage of a law which made the Federal inspection more thorough and efficient and extended it to cover a larger proportion of the total meat production. The distrust arising from the agitation regarding packing-house conditions in the spring of 1906 has given way to renewed confidence in the wholesomeness of our inspected meats.

WHAT FEDERAL INSPECTION IS DOING.

In the fiscal year 1906 the inspection was conducted at 163 establishments in 58 cities and towns, while the following year it was applied to 708 establishments in 186 cities and towns. The number of Federal employees engaged in this inspection July 1, 1906, was 764; it is now 2,448. In the fiscal year 1906 the post-mortem inspection covered 42,901,284 animals and 158,953 carcasses, and 126,159 parts were condemned. For the year ending September 30, 1907—the first twelve months under the full operation of the new law—53,752,577 animals were inspected, and 160,366 carcasses and 888,653 parts were condemned. There were also condemned in reinspection during the last-named period 27,275,711 pounds of meat and meat-food products which had for various reasons become unwholesome or unfit for food since the inspection at time of slaughter, and for the inspection and condemnation of which the old law made no provision.

THOROUGHNESS OF THE LAW.

Under former law the inspection was practically confined to an examination before and at the time of slaughter. Now it not only comprises a careful ante-mortem and post-mortem veterinary inspection, but follows the product through all the processes of preparing, curing, canning, etc., prevents the use of harmful preservatives and coloring matter, requires honest labeling, and enforces sanitation in all the plants and processes.

PROTECTING THE PEOPLE'S FOOD AND DRINK.

The pure-food law which safeguards the food, drink, and drugs of the people, also owes its enactment to the President. Investigations had disclosed that an immense amount of deception, fraud and deliberate swindling was practiced by the misbranding of food products. False and misleading claims were often printed on the label attached to such products. False statements of origin or of the country in which the substance was produced were repeatedly made. Where a particular State or locality had managed to build up a reputation for its products, and thereby enhance their market value, it had become a common practice for manufacturers in other sections to steal the name of a favorite State or locality in order to enjoy the profit of an enhanced price. Adulteration of food, drink, and drugs had become prevalent to an alarming extent, and until President Roosevelt intervened it was an extremely difficult matter to obtain a pure article. The law, passed as a result of this action, has been enforced with due regard and consideration to business interests, and it is a fact that not a single honest manufacturer has been injured by the enactment. The people to-day obtain food which does not contain foreign substances, deleterious to health.

REASONS FOR FAITH IN ROOSEVELT.

The unbounded faith the American people have in President Roosevelt arises from their belief that in whatever he does he is actuated by a whole-souled desire to advance their interests. He has given powerful impetus to the movement for the upbuilding of the Navy. He has encouraged officers and men of that service by the deep personal interest he has evinced in their work. During the Spanish War, three years before Mr. Roosevelt assumed the Presidency, the American fleet which destroyed the Spanish squadron at Santiago de Cuba made a percentage of less than 3 per cent of hits—that is to say, only three shells out of every hundred struck the enemy's vessels. To-day the record of the fleet is more than 59 per cent. This means that sixty shells out of every hundred hit the target. Had the conditions of gunnery which existed when Mr. Roosevelt entered the White House continued, the American people would have a fleet, in material as good as any in the world, but in efficiency far below that of any other nation. As it is, we have a homogeneous, effective fleet, well officered and well manned, ready and able to uphold and maintain the dignity and honor of the nation. The President has increased the efficiency of the Army by giving it a new organization, based upon principles found essential in all great modern wars, and by eliminating the dead wood which develops in a military body. The American people are not a military people, and the President would not have them so. What he wants is a small nucleus of well-trained troops around which a great force of citizen soldiery may be organized. He is encouraging rifle practice by every citizen, in this following the example of the Swiss, who are expert shots, and who, therefore, are more valuable for defensive purposes in case war should ever come upon them.

DEFI OF THE STANDARD.

Abraham Lincoln made many wise sayings. One of these, which is in common use, is the following: "You can fool some of the people all the time, and all the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." The trust magnates and financiers who had been picking the pockets of the people have come to realize now the truth contained in this epigram. They had grown to despise the people for their innocence and trust. The Standard Oil Company defiantly told the President to go ahead with his investigation and prosecution and made it clear that it considered itself more powerful than the Government. It was fined $29,000,000 in Chicago for accepting rebates from the Chicago and Alton Railroad. It has been alleged that the Standard was too severely punished for merely technical violations of the law, and the fine has been characterized as "one of the atrocities of modern times." The amount of the fine imposed was, of course, a matter with which the administrative officers of the Government were only indirectly concerned. The trial court had a wide range in which to exercise discretion, extending from $1,500,000 to $29,240,000. The decision was not final, but must be reviewed by higher courts.

ENORMOUS PROFITS FROM SECRET RATES.

Nevertheless, anyone familiar with the facts in connection with the rebate prosecutions knows that the Standard exhausted every means to defend itself. The secret rates the Standard obtained from the Chicago and Alton constituted only a feature of a great system of discriminatory rates practically covering the entire country. As the Standard undersold competitors in the great Southwest by means of the secret rate over the Chicago and Alton, it was able to secure an entire monopoly of the business of that section, and having brought about this result it increased its prices. It has been estimated that in 1904 the Standard's subsidiary company, which controlled the Southwest, made over 690 per cent on its capital stock. This enormous profit has been enjoyed for a period of fifteen years. In the light of this fact, can it be said that the fine imposed by Judge Landis was excessive?

DEBAUCHERY OF AMERICAN MEN.

And when we have considered all the facts in connection with the Standard Oil monopoly, who will not join in the regret of Judge Landis that the law failed to authorize him to impose also imprisonment upon the men guilty of the nefarious practices shouldered upon the creature that could not be placed behind the bars, but could only be fined. Judge Landis declared: "The men who thus deliberately violated this law (Elkins antirebate statute) wound society more deeply than does he who counterfeits the coin or steals letters from the mail." Who will not say that this conviction is just, when he recalls that the Standard's methods have contaminated hundreds of men who were forced to evade and circumvent the law, to bribe and cajole and to destroy competition by unfair methods?

THE ROOSEVELT VIRTUES.

We have seen that the course pursued by the President has been inspired by—

Honesty, sincerity, patriotism. Faithfulness to the people and to his oath. Farsighted preparation for continued prosperity.

WHAT SCANDALS HAVE COME.

Now, let us look at the things for which others are admittedly responsible but the effect of which is sought to be shouldered upon the President. These include—

The insurance scandals.
The railroad scandals.
The corporation scandals.
The stock-jobbing scandals.

Ask yourself—

Did Mr. Roosevelt cause the insurance scandals?
Did Mr. Roosevelt cause the Chicago and Alton scandal?
Did Mr. Roosevelt cause the Standard Oil scandal?
Did Mr. Roosevelt cause the New York Metropolitan Traction scandal?
Did Mr. Roosevelt cause the New York banking scandals?

THE CHILDREN OF SELFISHNESS.

Now, let us consider what the men really involved in these scandals were actuated by. We conclude selfishness, and as the outgrowth of this vice: Dishonesty, insincerity, treason to the best interests of their country, short-sightedness with respect to themselves and their country.

THE INSURANCE DISCLOSURES.

The facts in connection with these various scandals are too fresh in the memory of the country to require repetition. It is sufficient to refer to the reckless extravagance of the men charged with the solemn duty of caring for the funds intrusted to them in the interest of bereaved beloved. Who can soon forget the superb balls and dinners given by Hyde, of the Equitable, "in the interest of the policy holders," or of the "slush fund" used to bribe legislators, or the "rake off" which the favored enjoyed from investments of the money of policy holders, or the imperiling of this money in stock-gambling operations, or the extravagant nepotism praticed.

LAW HONESTY OF INSURANCE FINANCIERS.

President Roosevelt was moved by the disclosures to state to Congress that "it has been only too clearly shown that certain of the men at the head of these large corporations (insurance) take but a small note of the ethical distinction between honesty and dishonesty; they draw the line only this side of what may be called 'law honesty,' the kind of honesty necessary in order to avoid falling into the clutches of the law. Of course, the only complete remedy for this condition must be found in an aroused public conscience, a higher sense of ethical conduct in the community at large, and especially among business men and in the great profession of the law, and in the growth of a spirit which condemns all dishonesty, whether in rich man or in poor man, whether it takes the shape of bribery or of blackmail." The President was most anxious for Federal legislation regulating insurance, but unfortunately it was established that such legislation would be unconstitutional; and he has been compelled to content himself with an insurance law for the District of Columbia, which is serving as a model for the States to copy.

SOWING THE WIND.

The conduct of the Hydes and McCalls in exploiting policy holders for their personal benefit was observed also by the Rockefellers and Harrimans with a similar object in view. It is hardly necessary to speak further of Rockefeller and Harriman, but let us consider for a moment the operations of the Heinzes, Morses, and Thomases in New York. F. Augustus Heinze was elected president of the Mercantile National Bank last spring. His reputation was anything but that needed to give the public confidence in a banking institution. In connection with the celebrated Amalgamated Copper deal, he was accused of the most reckless manipulation of the courts, legislatures, banks, and mining companies. Into the management of what had been a well-managed, conservative concern, he introduced such men as Charles W. Morse and the Thomas brothers, who were known speculators and plungers, and whose operations naturally were subject to distrust and suspicion.

THE CHARACTER OF THE HEINZE GANG.

The public knew these men were associated in all sorts of speculative deals, as well as in the joint ownership or control of several national banks, and a still greater number of New York City State banks and trust companies. It is common newspaper report that, although Heinze may be a man of great talents, he is nothing but a high-handed, reckless speculator. Morse was a plunger and speculator, but law honest.

His reputation was still further damaged by his family relations and associations with the notorious Abe Hummel, now serving a term in jail, so that when the crisis came the people were suspicious of anything with which his name was connected. While the Thomas brothers were known to have inherited large fortunes, they had the reputation of being in all sorts of speculative enterprises and having gone into the banking business mainly to obtain loans for these enterprises, which otherwise they could not have secured. They were known to lead fast lives, owning race horses and participating in all kinds of spectacular sports, which, although perhaps not inherently vicious, certainly did not add to their reputation as bankers. Charles T. Barney, president of the Knickerbocker Trust, who committed suicide, was known to be faithless to every relation in life. So much for New York. John R. Walsh, who failed in Chicago, was of clean personal habits, and made the mistake of going into too many different enterprises at the same time and endeavoring to finance them alone. To save himself, and probably with the hope of carrying various concerns, he loaned to them from the national bank and two State banks which he owned some $15,000,000 of the money of his depositors. The Walsh failure was one of a number of known instances of unfaithfulness to financial trusts and induced apprehension in the public mind as to the standing of the institutions to which they confided their savings. He is now undergoing trial for violation of the banking laws.

THE PEOPLE FOR THE ROOSEVELT POLICIES.

Here then we have the comparison. Roosevelt, clean, honest, faithful, on the one hand, and Rockefeller, Harriman, Hyde, McCall, Heinze, Morse, Barney, the Thomases, and Walsh, on the other. It is not to be wondered at that the President has such a firm hold upon the confidence of the people; not to be wondered at that there is such a universal demand that he continue in the office of President. Without ambition, determined not to run again, the President emphasizes that he is not actuated by personal motives. All he wants—and in this the people know he is unselfish—is the continuance of his policies for decency, cleanliness, honesty, and morality. Suffering from the exploitation of the unscrupulous, indignant at the work of those men in digging an abyss into which the country would have plunged had not a man of strong heart and strong mind interfered, there is no question that the people will demonstrate their purpose by their ballots to continue the Roosevelt policies and enjoy for themselves and save for their posterity a land undefiled, sound, honest, and prosperous.

FIXING THE DATE.

There is no difficulty in fixing the date, when, affrighted by the terrible revelations of wrongdoing in institutions and by men of public trust, the people began to lose confidence in Wall street, to dispose of their holdings in stock and to hoard their hard-earned cash.

CAUSES WHICH PRODUCE PANICS.

The tightening of the money market and the more careful scrutiny of credits which have been going on for a year or two, were sure signs of the approach of a crisis. It is impossible to draw the line absolutely between the legitimate and conservative enterprises, and those of a speculative character which have coincidently absorbed the credits of the country, and locked up in the form of fixed or unproductive investments such an amount of capital that there is not sufficient left to carry on the business thus promoted. We have on the one side such large investments as the Pennsylvania and other railways have been making, and on the other, investments in all sorts of oil and mining shares and various flotations of stocks, which are not only highly speculative, but often fraudulent and criminal in their nature.

FIRING THE MINE.

It is, of course, natural and probably inevitable, when such a condition of expansion has been reached, that the spark that fires the mine, or incident that produces the panic, is almost sure to come from the speculative if not the fraudulent enterprises. The liquidation thus produced, if not promptly stopped, leads so far as to involve men in charge of the most careful and conservative undertakings.

It is beyond doubt that the immediate incident which led to "The rich man's panic" of last March was the revelation of indefensible financiering of which Harriman was guilty.

It is beyond doubt that the immediate incident which led to the panic of October, 1907, was the collapse of the corner in the stock of the United Copper Company, which had been engineered by the Heinzes.

HOW THE PANIC WAS PRECIPITATED.

It was the failure of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, due to suspicion in the public mind, which led to the issue of clearing-house certificates by the New York banks, in which they were at once followed by the banks of all the leading cities throughout the country. It is almost certain that if the banking crisis had not been precipitated in the city of New York by suspicion entertained against Heinze and his crowd, the liquidation which at the time was in progress in the stock market, spreading to the commercial and industrial concerns, would have proceeded more slowly and quietly and that nothing more disastrous than a gradual decline in business would have occurred instead of the widespread panic which occurred.

WHAT WARS AND DISASTER DID.

Wall street financiers have been expecting for more than a year a decline in business. Wars and natural disasters have destroyed hundreds of millions of dollars during the past few years. The war between the United States and Spain, the world intervention in China, the war between the British and the Boers, and the war between Russia and Japan destroyed at least $3,000,000,000; and $500,000,000 was swallowed up in the earthquakes of San Francisco and Valparaiso, Chile. Five billion dollars have been used up in the construction of permanent improvements, now represented by the securities held by those who gave the money. Writing a year ago, one Wall street magnate declared that the New York Stock Exchange had ceased to be a free market, but had become the plaything of a few managers of cliques and pools to such an extent that the investing public remained out of the market, in spite of tempting announcements of increased dividends and stock distributions. Europe at that time shared with the United States distrust of American corporate and gambling methods and cried out against the use of American finance bills. Farseeing financiers saw the necessity of trimming sails for the approaching storm.

ROOSEVELT NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR THE PANIC.

In view of these facts it is difficult to have patience with those who throw the responsibility for the recent panic upon the President. Byron W. Holt, editor of Moody's Magazine, and an authority on finance, writing in Everybody's Magazine, expressed the following conclusion:

"In view of all the facts it is absurd to credit the present panic to President Roosevelt, to anticorporation legislation, to 'muck raking,' or to socialistic agitation. It would, perhaps, be more reasonable to suppose that, together with the exposures in insurance and other industries, these factors, by causing distrust in 1906, checked speculation and inflation, and thus prevented an even greater collapse and panic than otherwise would have occurred. The sooner corruption is uncovered and crime exposed the safer are our institutions and the less danger there is of panic and disaster. Even 'muck raking,' by preventing present bad management from becoming worse, may do more good than harm."

DEPRESSION IN EUROPE.

But the United States has not been the sole sufferer in the way of financial depression. Europe, too, has sustained a setback during the past year. The following table shows the decrease of stock values on the London Exchange:

Stock.	Price on November 20, 1906.	Price on November 20, 1907.	Difference.

PRESIDENT NOT IMPETUOUS.

Attempts have been made to show that the President engaged in an impetuous and ill-considered raid on corporations generally, and that the financial situation which now exists, was created by his rash acts. It is a matter of common knowledge that the President, for years, has believed in Government control of railroads and corporations, has favored publicity, has demanded equal treatment for the rich and poor, and has insisted upon action to guard the people from the evil use of ill-gotten wealth. In this connection, the following parallel columns should be scrutinized:

FIRST MESSAGE, DECEMBER 3, 1901.

"* * * There are real and grave evils, one of the chief being overcapitalization, because of its many baleful consequences; and a resolute and practical effort must be made to correct those evils.

"There is a widespread conviction that the great corporations known as trusts are in certain of their features and tendencies hurtful to the general welfare. * * * It is based upon sincere conviction that combination and concentration should be not prohibited, but supervised and within reasonable limits controlled; and in my judgment this conviction is right."

"Corporations engaged in interstate commerce should be regulated if they are found to exercise a license working to the public injury. It should be as much the aim of those who work for social betterment to rid the business world of crimes of cunning as to rid the entire body politic of crimes of violence. Great corporations exist only because they are created and safeguarded by our institutions; and it is therefore our right and our duty to see that they work in harmony with these institutions."

"The first essential in determining how to deal with the great industrial combinations is knowledge of the facts—publicity. In the interest of the public, the Government should have the right to inspect and examine the workings of the great corporations engaged in interstate business. Publicity is the only sure remedy which we can now invoke. What further remedies are needed in the way of governmental regulation, or taxation, can only be

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND., MAY 30, 1907.

"* * * But the public interest requires guaranty against improper multiplication of securities in the future. Reasonable regulations for their issuance should be provided so as to secure as far as may be that the proceeds thereof shall be devoted to legitimate business purposes. In providing against overcapitalization we shall harm no human being who is honest; and we shall benefit many, for overcapitalization often means an inflation that invites business panic. It always conceals the true relation of the profit earned to the capital invested, creating a burden of interest payments, which may redound to the loss alike of the wage-earner and the general public, which is concerned in the rates paid by shippers; it damages the small investors, discourages thrift, and puts a premium on gambling and business trickery."

"* * * Surely, it ought not to be necessary to say that it (his policy) in no shape or way represents any hostility to corporations as such. On the contrary, it means a frank recognition of the fact that combinations of capital, like combinations of labor, are a natural result of modern conditions and of our national development. As far as in my ability lies, my endeavor is and will be to prevent abuse of power by either and to favor both so long as they do well. The aim of the National Government is quite as much to favor and protect honest corporations, honest business men of wealth, as to bring to justice those individuals and corporations representing dishonest methods."

"We hope as one of the chief means for betterment of conditions to secure as complete publicity of the railroads as now obtains with regard to national banks. * * * I believe in proper publicity. There has been complaint of some of the investigations recently carried on, but those who complain should put the blame where it belongs—upon the misdeeds which are done in darkness, and not upon the investigations which brought them determined after publicity has been obtained by process of law and in the course of administration. The first requisite is knowledge, full and complete—knowledge which may be made public to the world."

"The captains of industry, who have driven the railway systems across this continent, who have built up our commerce, who have developed our manufactures, have on the whole done good to our people. * * * There have been abuses connected with the accumulation of wealth; yet it remains true that a fortune accumulated in legitimate business can be accumulated by the person specially benefited only on condition of conferring immense incidental benefit upon others."

"The mechanism of modern business is so delicate that extreme care must be taken not to interfere with it in a spirit of rashness or ignorance. Many of those who have made it their vocation to denounce the great industrial combinations which are popularly, though with technical inaccuracy, known as 'trusts' appeal especially to hatred and fear. They are precisely the two emotions, when combined with ignorance, which unfit men for the exercise of cool and steady judgment."

"The course proposed is one phase of what should be a comprehensive and farreaching scheme of constructive statesmanship for the purpose of broadening our markets, securing our business interests on a safe basis, and making firm our new position in the industrial world, while scrupulously safeguarding the rights of wage-earner and capitalist, of investor and private citizen, so as to secure equity as between man and man in the Republic."

to light. The Administration is responsible for turning on the light, but it is not responsible for what the light showed."

"One great problem that we have before us is to preserve the rights of property; and these can only be preserved if we remember that they are in less jeopardy from the socialist and the anarchist than from the predatory man of wealth. It has become evident that to refuse to invoke the power of the nation to restrain the wrongs committed by the man of great wealth who does evil is not only to neglect the interests of the public, but is to neglect the interests of the man of means who acts honorably by his fellows. The power of the nation must be exerted to stop crimes of cunning no less than crimes of violence."

"But the bulk of our business is honestly done. In the natural indignation the people feel over the dishonesty, it is all essential that they should not lose their heads and get drawn into an indiscriminate raid upon all corporations, all people of wealth, whether they do well or ill. Out of any such wild movement good will not come, can not come, never has come."

"Every Federal law dealing with corporations or with railroads that has been put upon the statute books during the last six years has been a step in advance in the right direction. All action taken by the Administration under these and the preexisting laws has been just and proper. Every suit undertaken during that period has been a suit not merely warranted, but required, by the facts; a suit in the interest of the people as a whole, and, in the long run, particularly in the interest of the stockholders as well as in the interest of business men of property generally."

THE CRISIS.

It has been insinuated that the cause of the recent crisis was different from the causes of former panics. It attributes its occurrence to the frightening of capital. This is as much the immediate cause of all panics as flame is the cause of fire.

PROMOTING THE WHIRLWIND.

The truth is, men in whom the financial trust had been reposed, dishonest financiers and speculators, had sown the wind. The reaping of their dire harvest was aided by men who believed the only way to stop criminal prosecution of themselves and further governmental regulation of their interests was by creating a period of business depression which would harm the wage-earner and destroy Theodore Roosevelt.

A year ago these men began to make preparatons for a panic.

They warned certain groups of capitalists to arrange for the coming storm.

One corporation borrowed $30,000,000, not because it needed it at the time, but in order to meet the expected stringency.

It is worth while to make a brief review of condition of the country.

EVILS IN THE TRAIN OF PROSPERITY.

The volume of our foreign trade and our staple crops has tremendously increased. The past year, on account of the unprecedented crops of 1906 and the promise of large crops for 1907 caused trade and also credit to expand enormously. Consequently speculators became reckless and speculation extravagant. Partly because of the immense production of gold, money became cheaper—that is prices, in spite of the great crops, increased immensely.

CAUSES OF REDUCTION IN CIRCULATION.

The "money in circulation" is really the money that has been issued by the Government and has not been returned to the Treasury. For obvious reasons this is not the actual amount of money in circulation. The large amounts of cash that were taken out of the country by American subscriptions to English and Japanese war loans; the immense amounts spent abroad by American tourists in these prosperous times, and the amounts sent home by immigrants who are now working in all parts of our country much reduces this "money in circulation."

THE CRASH.

Prior to September the immense boom in speculation, together with the great increase in prices, caused a demand for money. The result was a general calling in of loans and a throwing upon the market of many stocks, producing falling prices. Then shares, like copper, which had been boosted too high, toppled over, and fell with a crash. Immediately capital became deeply alarmed. This happened just at the time when the immensely valuable crops of 1907 were drawing money from other directions. Money became scarcer and capital more timid. This resulted in the crisis in New York. When it became evident there was an abundance of currency in the city capital immediately quieted down.

GREATEST PANIC OF MODERN TIMES AVERTED.

The fact can not be passed over that capital had been made more wary and timid by the revelations in connection with the insurance and other companies in New York. The mismanagement of funds held by them and their misuse in speculation of all kinds caused general unrest to both capital and credit. As has been stated, had these revelations not occurred at the time and in the manner they did, had not correctives been applied, and had matters taken their inevitable course, the result would have been the greatest panic of our times. With regard to the panic of 1893, it must be remembered that on March 4 of that year there was a change in the political administration of the country, which threatened to disturb the trade conditions of the United States through the abrogation of the customs tariff and the reciprocity treaties then in force. This fear proved justifiable, and the country suffered for four years—that is, until a new customs tariff was insured. The present political conditions of the country tend, through safeguarding investments by publicity, toward the averting and in no way toward the development of a prolonged crisis.

A study of the following table will promote knowledge of the situation:

[a] Included in previous heading. [b] Exclusive of gold held to cover certificates.

The foregoing table establishes that there has been in circulation during the year 1907 and before the panic came almost double the amount of money in circulation in 1893. The amount of gold in circulation and in the Treasury was almost three times greater. The commerce of the United States had doubled during the intervening years. Production had vastly increased.

Yet, in spite of this enormous prosperity, panic came.

Why?

Because the President had enforced the law?

Absurd.

Because the President insisted upon elimination of abuses and future honest management of corporate affairs?

Absurd.

The panic came because of the mistrust and suspicion arising from the flagrant misconduct of men managing enterprises in which the people had their money invested and because of the desire of a few malefactors of great wealth to escape punishment for their crimes and to bring about the return of the "good old times" when they could plunder unrestrained.

Lynch law, as expressed by runs on banks, withdrawal of cash, and hoarding, was the recourse of the unreasoning.

And as the natural consequence, the many honest suffered with the few dishonest.

STOPPED THE PANIC.

The country knows of the promptness with which the President and Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou acted to stop the panic and avert the awful consequences which it threatened. How Secretary Cortelyou worked ceaselessly in New York, distributing Government deposits among national banks, in order to equip them to stand against runs by frightened depositors; how the President decided to issue $50,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds and so much of 3 per cent certificates as might be necessary up to the full limit of $100,000,000 authorized by law. The firm stand taken by Mr. Roosevelt and his chief aid, Mr. Cortelyou, reassured the timid and tended to restore the confidence that the misdeeds of "frenzied financiers" had almost destroyed.

THE OUTLOOK.

What the situation would have been had not the President acted with his customary energy and promptitude, can best be left to the imagination. For a moment, industries began to curtail hours or to shut down and to throw people out of employment. But they are resuming and the outlook indicates there will not be a condition of depression warranting a general dismissal of employees or reduction in salaries. The crops are flourishing, the demand for American manufactures continues at home and abroad, and most of the corporations known to be afflicted with cancerous growths have either eradicated them or the Government is applying the knife in accordance with the law. Who will not admit that the business life of the country to-day is far healthier and more vigorous than it has ever been?

Until the policies of Theodore Roosevelt shall be forgotten, there will be honesty and decency in industrial operations; and a sounder and saner prosperity will be the resultant enormous benefit to all the people.

"For I regard this contest as one to determine who shall rule in this free country, the people through their governmental agents or a few ruthless and domineering men, whose wealth makes them peculiarly formidable, because they hide behind the breastworks of corporate organization.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

[The Saturday Evening Post.]

DISHONEST FINANCIERS, NOT ROOSEVELT, RESPONSIBLE.

[By John Wanamaker, Philadelphia.]

Things are quieting down, the worst of the business depression is passing, the tide has actually turned, and confidence and prosperity will come along gradually.

For the widespread lack of financial confidence from which the country has been suffering I do not hold President Roosevelt to be in any degree responsible. It is the result of conditions which he has indeed helped to make known, but of which he has not been in any degree the cause. As he himself has admirably expressed it: If he lights a torch he is not responsible for what the light shows.

The depression first began through the loss of public confidence in financial names which the public had long been taught to revere. First came the great insurance scandals, in which the revelations regarding Alexander, McCall, and Hyde shocked and alarmed the public. We are still suffering from that. More recently there have been revelations regarding such things as the Metropolitan Railway management in New York, and the banking methods of the Heinzes, Morse, and others.

Lack of confidence and financial retribution have come as a punishment for financial wrongdoing; it is precisely the kind of punishment which follows a cashier's breach of trust. It is not surprising that a lack of confidence which ought to affect only those institutions which have justly forfeited trust should have extended to other great corporations and banks.

Meanwhile, the keeping of money out of the banks by people who aim at saving their principal, even at the expense of interest, has caused distinct increase of the troubled financial situation.

But it is all coming out satisfactorily. The country is so prosperous, manufacturers and workingmen are alike so busy, that there can be no cause for continued depression. As soon as the people feel that dishonesty has been thoroughly discountenanced and exposed, and that, after such a lesson as we have been having, the financial world will understand that honesty is the best policy, there will be a complete return of normal conditions.

DISTRUST OF WALL STREET METHODS.

[By Stuyvesant Fish, ex-president of the Illinois Central Railroad.]

The strain which the financial institutions and the great corporations of this country are undergoing at this writing is not the result of suddenly formed or suddenly precipitated conditions. It is the breaking of a storm which has been visibly rising for many, many months. I do not think I can better comply with "Everybody's" request for an analysis of the causes of the money stringency of this fall and winter, than by sending to you a copy of a letter written by me to the editor of a financial journal almost a year ago, for publication in his annual symposium of opinions as to the outlook. It was written at a time of great buoyancy of the market; Wall Street was highly optimistic; since then we have had three "panics": the market collapse of March, the "silent panic" of August, and the present period of wreck and depression involving banks and other fiduciary institutions. This letter seems to me ample proof that the present crisis was easily discernible to myself and others at least ten months before it came; and I have no change to make now in my apportionment of the causes responsible for it:

"DECEMBER, 27, 1906.

"DEAR SIR: Replying to your question, 'Are we approaching a great industrial and political crisis?' I beg to say:

"In point of time a great industrial crisis is due, and there are many indications of its being imminent. Despite the unprecedented output of gold, money is dear the world over, and dear because of high prices and activity in trade. Nor are other causes for dear money wanting. Great Britain has not fully made up its losses in the Boer war; Japan and Russia, particularly the latter, have scarcely begun to recover from the effects of their recent war.

"Indeed, it would look as if Russia had not fully financed the cost thereof, and may be on the verge of civil war. Within the past year there have been tremendous losses of capital in the destruction of San Francisco, and in the less awful calamity at Valparaiso, and at its close we have famine in China. Looked at the world over, the volume of crops of 1906 was not above an average, despite the phenomenal yield in the United States. Prices of commodities are above the normal and rising. Labor all over the world is dearer than ever before; and the tendency is toward higher wages and shorter hours; conditions which are economically wasteful as regards product, whatever their effect may be on the laboring class.

"Turning now to our own country, New York, especially that part of it known as 'Wall Street,' has absorbed, and is absorbing, more than its share of the loanable fund. While our Western and Southern banks—indeed all banks which are 'out of town' to New York—are lending more freely than usual at this season, that which they lend is instantly and persistently absorbed by Wall Street.

"The New York Stock Exchange has ceased to be a free market, where buyers and sellers fix prices through the ebb and flow of demand and supply, and has become the plaything of a few managers of cliques and pools to such an extent that for months past every announcement of increased dividends, of stock distributions, and of rights, has been met by a fall in prices. The investing public is and remains out of the market, not because of ventures in industrials, in electric railways, or in suburban real estate—the speculation in each of which was checked months ago—nor yet because of the more recently pricked bubble in mining shares, but simply because of the distrust which even those possessed of ample means have of the methods of corporate finance now in vogue in New York. That Europe shares this distrust of those methods is shown by its outcry against the misuse of American finance bills.

"The situation in London, the only available free-gold market in Europe, is by no means certain, even if it may not be called critical. A 6 per cent bank rate has never before prevailed for so long a time, and it continues to prevail chiefly, if not solely, through fear in London of what America may do. While it may contribute to our national vanity as a 'World Power' and as a financial center, to feel that London fears us, that does not increase confidence in our own future. We are still a debtor nation. Europe holds vastly more of our securities than we hold of all foreign securities.

"Indeed, it seems to me that we are already embarked on a long-needed moral financial reformation, which, like the religious reformation of the middle ages, will through much cruelty work out good in the end. To the needs of such a reformation the public is fully awake.

"The election of Mr. Hughes, a Republican, as governor of New York, accompanied as it was by the election of all the Democratic candidates for other offices, shows the temper of the people even in this State, and it is vastly stronger elsewhere. The selection by Mr. Hughes of Mr. Keep as superintendent of banks proves that the governor-elect recognizes the public demand for moral financial reform. That he is determined to reform other bureaus of the State government having jurisdiction over other corporations, through the appointment of men equally honest, capable, and fearless, is known of all men. President Roosevelt and his cabinet are like-minded with the governor in this respect. We as yet but see the beginning. Time will work out the end."

ROOSEVELT AND DECENT BUSINESS.

[By Ernest Cawcroft.]

Roosevelt is the friend of decent business. He has not menaced the right, privilege, or opportunity of any man to cultivate his acres, run his looms, barter his goods, or to mine the natural resources of the Republic. He has not deprived the man who works of a present or future dollar; he has not menaced the past or future dollars of those capitalists who honor the nation and themselves by showing by their methods that the basis of decent business is the production of articles which satisfy human needs. It has been his consistent endeavor, his insistent demand of legislators, that the commerce of the nation be surrounded with such a statutory code of honor that the results of business endeavor will not be pillaged by the mobs or absorbed by the machinations of predatory wealth.

Theodore Roosevelt is the friend of to-day's business because he has insisted that the coordination of capital and labor within the law is the only certain pathway to continued commercial prosperity. He has proclaimed that a prosperity based upon special privileges awarded to the few is an artificial indulgence of Providence and can not be of long duration; he has maintained that the business prosperity of the nation as a whole is dependent upon the moderate success of the many, rather than the abnormal achievements of the few in finance. The force and the sovereign fiat of his great office have been employed to compel capital and labor alike to obey the laws of the Republic. He is the friend of business because he has backed his words in behalf of commercial fair play by deeds in furtherance of business squareness.

He is the friend of the present genuine business interests of the nation because his administrative efforts to effect the dissolution of combinations existing in violation of law, even though these are approved by economic science, have enlarged the field of business opportunity for the many. Business has found and does find in him a friend, because he has planned to enable every producer to place his goods in the markets on the basis of transportation equality; commerce sees in him a champion, because, by a succession of acts, he has sought and is seeking to establish the decency of American products and the standard of Yankee business honor. A tarnished commercial name, uncleansed by executive or legislative action, will deter the sale of those surplus products abroad, whose very existence menaces the continuance of our prosperity from time to time.

He is the friend of decent business because he has made the fame of the financial pirate odious throughout the land; thereby he has given added dignity to the business of production. He is a friend of business because he wants to put a dollar's worth of property in the stocks which the few issue to the many.

He is the friend of business because his revelation of rottenness in high places has demonstrated to the world, by a process of exclusion, that American business men and their institutions are sound, sane, and square.

He menaced the beef trust until it finished house cleaning; he menaced the railroads until their managers quit bribing their trade through rebates. Not until stock watering is justified by a revelation from Sinai may Roosevelt be credited with being the foe of business.

Let us not in the hour of our vexation desert the man who has made patriotism stronger than the pocketbook.

[The Saturday Evening Post.]

A CONSTRUCTIVE FORCE.

[By Henry Clews.]

I do not believe that Theodore Roosevelt is a menace to American business. On the contrary, I think that it will ultimately prove that he has been a constructive and cleansing force. There is not an intelligent or fair-minded man in the whole United States who sincerely questions the honesty of Mr. Roosevelt's motives. In fact, I would go so far as to say that the name of Roosevelt is synonymous with honesty.

In the firm attitude that the President has taken toward capital and corporate power I maintain that he has had no other purpose than to protect the rights of all the people, and that his organized investigation, as some have seen fit to call it, has been directed entirely at the unsound, the unstable, and the dark places.

The country is paying what might be called the penalty of excessive prosperity. President Roosevelt, I think, has done much to enable the country to withstand this periodical reaction, because under him the country has grown and waxed fat.

To those detractors of the President's policies I should like to say that when he took the oath of office it was to uphold the Constitution. What he has done in all his legislative and executive acts has been to maintain the integrity of the Constitution. He has had the law and he has had the right on his side; in fact, he has only attacked dishonesty and lawbreaking.

Yet, while I fully approve of what he has done in the way of reform, I must confess that I do not entirely approve of his constantly repeated passionate utterances on the subject during the recent season of great apprehension and anxiety in financial circles.

That President Roosevelt should be blamed in any way for the banking troubles, business failures, and losses that have been made in the stock market is absolutely unfair. But it is always the case that the Executive in office bears the brunt of the disasters that overwhelm the country during his Administration.

I can well remember the calumny and the abuse which were heaped upon the devoted head of Abraham Lincoln. This denunciation did not for one moment cause him to desist in the great work that he had undertaken. To-day those who traduced him honor his memory. History will repeat itself, and the men who to-day are denouncing the President as a destroyer of confidence, as an annihilator of capital, will some day come to the realization that he is doing a great work.

The real cause of the present discontent and unrest in finance and in business lies to a large extent among the men who have committed the wrongdoing, who have abused corporate power, and who, when confronted with the revelations of their own misdeeds, have sought to put the blame on the President.

In view, therefore, of President Roosevelt's firm stand for the rights of the people against the corporate breakers of the law, we can forgive his excess of earnestness and his denunciation, which may have been ill-timed on some occasions. I believe in the end it will be proven that Mr. Roosevelt has aided rather than retarded a square deal in business operations.

THE DECLINING VALUE OF MONEY.

[By Byron W. Holt, editor of Moody's Magazine.]

The present financial crisis is world-wide. It is more acute in this country and in Japan because in these countries the prices of commodities, real estate, and securities have risen most rapidly, credit has been most extended, and speculation, largely on margin, has been wildest. It is almost equally acute in Egypt, and is pronounced in Germany, England, Canada, and other civilized countries. Uncivilized countries and countries that do not do business largely on a credit and margin or equity basis do not have financial panics.

The causes of this, as of all other similar crises, are economic and fundamental; they are not at all psychological and hysterical, unless the almost common desire to speculate when prices are rising may be termed psychological.

Economic conditions were ripe for a panic in 1907. Numerous professors and other financial students forecast, even before last March, "The irrepressible crisis," as Secretary W. H. Lough, jr., of the New York University School of Commerce, wrote of it in a financial magazine. Some of our greatest financiers began in 1906 to curtail credits, to stop unnecessary improvements, and in other ways to trim sail and prepare for the coming storm. They saw, all over the world, credit expanded to the danger point; they saw a tremendous expansion of loans and discounts, not only actually, but as regards deposits; they saw demand deposits increasing rapidly and cash reserves becoming inadequate; they saw liquid capital being changed to fixed capital at an unprecedented rate.

A rapid and long-continued rise in prices, such as we have had since 1897, always results in speculation and inflation. The cause of the present great rise in prices is the rapidly increasing output and supply of gold. This has caused its exchange value to depreciate. This depreciation is also largely responsible for the very high interest rates of to-day, which in turn are responsible for the present world-wide decline in the prices of bonds and other securities.

Present financial and industrial conditions, as to gold, prices, interest rate, business and credit, closely parallel those of 1857. If our banking conditions were not very much better than were those of 1857, we might now expect to see duplicated the avalanche of failures of banks and commercial houses which then laid business prostrate. The greater soundness and stability of our present banking institutions, together with better management and concert of action, have probably averted for us a panic which would have been as much greater than previous panics as our business expansion is greater than that of any previous period.

As happened in 1857, we may expect to see a sudden and sharp business depression follow in the wake of our financial crisis. We may be well through this depression in six months. It can hardly last more than a year, with gold depreciating in value and with prices tending strongly upward. Liquidation in commodities, real estate, and labor is not likely to go nearly so far as it has gone in bonds and stocks. Not only will a shortage in the world's food supply prevent a heavy decline in the prices of foodstuffs, but the flood of gold from our mines—amounting to more than $1,000,000 a day—tends to check any fall that may occur in the prices of real property.

But few persons realize the very great significance of this outpour of gold. In 1887 the world's annual output of gold was $105,774,900. In 1897 it was $236,075,700. In 1907 it will be about $430,000,000. The output is increasing rapidly, because the cost of producing gold is declining more rapidly than is the cost of producing most other commodities. The cost of producing a thing fixes, or tends to fix, its exchange value with other things. As gold is the universal standard of value, and the prices of all other commodities are quoted in gold, we have no way of judging the changing values of gold except by the change in the quoted prices of other commodities—that is, by the change in the level of average prices. As the price level has been rising rapidly for ten years, we know that the value of gold is depreciating equally rapidly.

The effects of the declining value of gold are far-reaching. They are revolutionary in the financial, industrial, economical, political, and social worlds. Not only are they seen in the rising prices of all tangible property, in high interest rates, in higher nominal but lower actual wages, and in lower prices of all securities bearing fixed rates of income, but they are upsetting all calculations in savings and insurance, based upon averages. Because of these effects debts are shrinking, to the benefit of debtors and the injury of creditors, and many new problems are presented to investors, employers of labor, politicians, and legislators.

Average prices will probably not decline more than 10 or 12 per cent. A decline of more than 15 per cent is necessary to cause a widespread failure of banks, mercantile houses, manufactures, and real estate interests. Inside of two years the cost of living, measured by gold, will almost certainly be higher than now and will be rising rapidly.

In view of all the facts, it is absurd to credit the present panic to President Roosevelt, to anti-corporation legislation, to "muck-raking," or to socialistic agitation. It would, perhaps, be more reasonable to suppose that, together with the exposures in insurance and other industries, these factors, by causing distrust in 1906, checked speculation and inflation, and thus prevented an even greater collapse and panic than would otherwise have occurred. The sooner corruption is uncovered and crime exposed, the safer are our institutions and the less danger there is of panic and disaster. Even "muck-raking," by preventing present bad management from becoming worse, may do more good than harm.

Two contributing causes of the present crisis are found in our inelastic currency system and our uncivilized tariff laws.

Nearly two years ago Mr. Jacob H. Schiff declared that if we did not reform our "hodge-podge, clumsy currency system" we should have one of the worst panics we had ever seen. Such a currency famine as we are now having is impossible in Canada, Scotland, or any other country with an asset currency. We can save ourselves now only by devising clearing-house certificates and other forms of asset currency which we will use, some illegally, until confidence is restored.

Our excessive tariff duties on imports are probably largely responsible for the fact that average prices have risen about 55 per cent in this country, since 1897, against a rise in England of about 35 per cent. This greater rise has induced greater speculation, has put a greater strain on our capital, and has caused interest rates to go higher here than in any other country. A sound and elastic currency and a reasonable tariff system would most certainly have mitigated, if they would not have prevented, our present financial crisis.

This highly enlightened country should be as well prepared to weather a financial storm as is Canada or England or Germany.

ANDREW CARNEGIE ON THE PANIC.

[Associated Press dispatch.]

NEW YORK, October 26.

Andrew Carnegie, upon his return from Europe to-day, after a long vacation abroad, expressed himself in a most optimistic way concerning the financial situation.

"I was delighted to read the good news this morning," he said. "I am surprised that the fall in stocks has been so small. This proves that the situation is not alarming and that the country is all right. Investors have only to hold on. The financial authorities have acted boldly, but wisely, and the flurry will soon blow over. It is quite right that savings banks should require notice.

"It should not be forgotten, however, that we have had the greatest expansion of modern times, and sure as fate, reaction must come and has already begun, but it will be healthful. We may have a season of less activity in trade, but that will be followed in due time by another period of expansion. Nothing can prevent the rapid progress of the Republic. She is all right and bound to distance all competitors in the race. Speculation will be less to the front for a time, but genuine business will not suffer seriously.

"GIVES PRESIDENT CREDIT.

"It lies in the nature of things that the attempt to attribute the recent and spasmodic fall in prices to the wise and, in the truest sense, the truly conservative resolve of the President and his Cabinet to enforce the salutary laws against the abuse of their powers by certain trusts is only a device to serve political intrigue.

"The decline in prices," continued Mr. Carnegie, "would have been greater had the people not been assured that investments in the stocks and bonds of corporations are hereafter to be safeguarded to a much greater degree than ever before.

"Nothing is proposed or intended by the President in this direction which is not the law in civilized States. No railroad corporation in Europe can increase its capital or its bonds or can merge with another without first obtaining authority from a competent tribunal. Even Canada has its commission for this purpose.

"SHOULD SUPERVISE TRUSTS.

"It is not only right, but necessary to supervise such corporations as we do national banks. They are creatures of the State, enjoying many privileges, and the interests of the nation must be protected. When this is secured it will be seen that the President has been a truly conservative force in the country, and that the investor is now protected from being swindled by small cliques of men who abuse their fiduciary positions as directors.

"This panic will soon run its course, as others have, and pass away, leaving no impediment to the return in due season of another period of wholesome, because needed, expansion of our resources, which are rapidly rendering those of other countries of less importance. This will reassure capital, which will flow to us from abroad even more abundantly than before, because our new laws will give security to the foreigner and our own investors, hitherto lacking.

"SAFEGUARDS ONLY AIM.

"Nothing more is aimed at by the President than such safeguards as the foreign investor has at home. Nothing of this kind should be objected to by the honest official, nothing less should be demanded by the people, and nothing less should the Government give.

"Let it be remembered that the President has been urging this vital reform for years, during which period prices have ruled highest, and that he stands to-day just where he did then, and where it is to be hoped he will stand until our laws protect honest investors from dishonest officials and their swindling schemes. New York is the best market in the world, because our country is the most profitable of all countries for the investment of money, and must continue to be so.

"All we have to do is to convince the world that our laws protect the investor as carefully as those of other civilized countries. This is the President's policy. He should be supported in this work."

DEMAGOGUES TO THE REAR.

[Editorial, the Washington Post, October 29, 1907.]

In every crisis of this country the cool, common sense of the people has mastered the situation.

The three days of foolish onslaught on financial institutions in New York brought into instant action the best qualities of the business men of the city, and has sufficed to array the entire country in solid phalanx for support of public and private credit. The insane proceedings of a few hundred persons, endangering for a time the interests of millions of our people, were quickly ended by the wisdom and firmness of leaders who knew the strength of our financial conditions and who felt they could rely upon the support and patriotism of the Administration and of the American people.

Every hour since the climax last Thursday has strengthened the ramparts which folly threatened and every measure adopted. The importation of gold, the issue of clearing-house certificates, the curtailing of stock speculation are a safeguard to the business of the whole country.

The excitement in New York has subsided and the danger is over, now that the business men of the country realize how close to fatal injury excited demagogues can bring them.

Congress will convene in December, with the sentiment of the country all alive to the necessity of amendment of the currency laws to meet just such emergencies and keen for legislation on corporations and trusts that, while protecting the people fully, will not be unjust to investors in corporate and industrial enterprises. The President has made it clear that he sympathizes with no wanton attacks on capital, that he favors no atrocious dragonades on vested interests, and the people of the Republic feel assured that in his message he will speak so distinctly and definitely for the measures he desires that those who have misrepresented will be humiliated and shamed.

Theodore Roosevelt is a sturdy reformer, no truckling demagogue. He is a student of history, a statesman able to apply its lessons wisely and well. Ambitious State executives, intellectual weaklings inoculated with the germs of demagogism, and disciples of socialism suffering from political mania in acute form, believe for the moment they are on the highway to national preferment by dastardly attacks on public confidence and vicious assaults on corporate interests.

They would appropriate the popularity of the President as puny valets who masquerade in the garments of a stalwart master. They forget that the President is the conservator of the rights of capital as he is the protector of the rights of the people.

He has nothing in common with those who tear down and destroy. He stands with the progress of the American Continent, with the spirit that won the West, with the ideals that builded from the naked rock of Plymouth and the vacant shore of Jamestown to this greatest nation of all time.

[Sydney Brooke, in the London Chronicle.]

ROOSEVELT, THE PEACEMAKER—AN ENGLISH TRIBUTE TO THE PRESIDENT—COURAGEOUS AND SINCERE.

President Roosevelt has done what no other man could have done, what no other man would have ventured to attempt. But for him not only would there have been no peace negotiations, but there would to-day be no peace. His two-fold success, first in bringing and then in keeping Russia and Japan together, is both a great personal and a great national triumph.

It is a personal triumph because he alone, after the destruction of the Russian armada, had the courage to speak out for humanity. He made peace not merely his aspiration, but his policy. The world watched his efforts with a certain admiring skepticism. It thought them premature, and premature in anybody else's hands they probably would have been. The task to which Mr. Roosevelt addressed himself asked a union of rare qualities. It asked first of all that moral courage which is willing to risk the reproach of meddlesomeness and the humiliation of a public rebuff. It asked, secondly, great flexibility of mind and disposition, great skill in the management of men, great resource in adapting various means to a single end.

And, thirdly and preeminently, it asked for its successful performance that whoever essayed it should be a man whose words and deeds had and were known to have the stamp of sincerity, singleness of purpose, and character.

All these qualities, all these qualifications, Mr. Roosevelt possessed, and to them he added the discernment of a statesman in knowing when to take occasion boldly by the hand. It was the man even more than the office that gave his representations their effective weight. Other Presidents might have tendered their good offices under similar circumstances; but not one of them, not even Lincoln, would have carried that international authority which Mr. Roosevelt has won for himself. The response which his proposals met with from the belligerents themselves and from the whole world of onlookers gave the measure of Mr. Roosevelt's standing in the opinions of his contemporaries. It was in its way a tribute in the field of international politics to the virtue of character.

But besides being this it was also a token of the confidence which is everywhere felt in the intentions and policy of the United States. Her intervention was the only intervention, under the circumstances of the moment, that at once compelled attention and aroused no suspicions. When America, through the mouth of her President, declared that the sole basis of her proposals was the feeling that "the progress of the world is being set back by the war between these two great nations," America was believed. There was no disposition either in Tokyo or St. Petersburg to regard her activity as a possible trap or as a screen for the furtherance of ends of her own. The President's diplomacy acquired a unique freedom and spaciousness from the conviction that it was untainted by self-seeking, and that its motive power was to be sought not in mere policy, not in a cold and exclusive study of purely national interests, but in a broad and genuine humanitarianism. For the prevalence of that conviction, which gave him precisely the assistance he needed, and gave it to him just when he most needed it, Mr. Roosevelt had to thank all American history. There was implied in his success an acknowledgment of the moral position which America holds among the nations of the world.

A PERSONAL TRIUMPH.

But if Mr. Roosevelt's initial success in bringing Russia and Japan within diplomatic speaking distance was as much owing to the fact that he was President of the United States as to the fact that he was Mr. Roosevelt, his later and more memorable triumph in forcing peace upon the two belligerents has been personal to himself alone. To speak of him as "forcing peace upon the two belligerents" is not, I think, to put it too strongly. When last Friday week he intervened in the negotiations matters had reached a deadlock. Sakhalin and the indemnity question stretched impassably between the rival envoys. A rupture was so imminent as to be accounted a matter not of days, but of hours. It was then, at that supreme and crucial moment, that Mr. Roosevelt determined to make himself felt.

Mr. Roosevelt has behind him a great and stirring part; he has before him the prospect of a great and stirring future. Everything he has ever done, everything he has ever said, has been stamped, above all things, by boldness and decisiveness. Yet I question whether he has ever yet approached, or whether he can ever again equal, the superb and astounding bravery of that particular deed. For the deed itself was a wholesale denial, by the very man who has been instrumental in summoning it, of the fundamental principle of the conference. That conference, in Mr. Roosevelt's own words, was to be a conference "directly and exclusively" between Russia and Japan. The author of that arrangement was now the first to break it.

But that was far from being the only consideration that might have deterred a less sanguine, a less dominant nature. He risked, indeed, an international snub of the kind that men and peoples so fantastically exaggerate. But he risked far more than that. He risked a failure that would have blotted out his initial achievement. And perhaps not one man in ten thousand expected that the result could be anything but failure. The problem that he tackled seemed not merely difficult, but hopeless; it seemed an effort "to solder close impossibilities and make them kiss."

MR. ROOSEVELT'S THOROUGHNESS.

But in Mr. Roosevelt's dictionary there is no such word as hopeless. "Right thou feelest, rush to do," was Emerson's formula for "freedom's secret." It is Mr. Roosevelt's, too, and less dangerous in him than in most men because of his background of solid Dutch caution and level-headedness. When Mr. Roosevelt is convinced that a great thing has to be done, he rushes to do it. Nothing is allowed to stand in his way. Conventions, the reproach of inconsistency, the hesitancies, and objections of little men of little minds—all these he heaves out of his path, if, indeed, they even cross his vision. That has always been his method, because it is the man himself. It was so in this case. He appointed himself the world's plenipotentiary. He broke the windows of diplomacy and let in the free clarifying breeze of conscience and humanity.

I recall inevitably a smaller but similar action of his. It was during the great anthracite coal strike of a few years ago. Pennsylvania was almost in a state of civil war. A terrible struggle was being fought out with the bullet, the torch, the bludgeon, and the knife. That in itself was horrible enough. But even more horrible was the suffering of the poor, who faced without coal the terrors of an American winter. Mr. Roosevelt was President. He knew, no one better, the dangers of a single move. Any step that he might take would be denounced as unconstitutional—and there is no more damning word than that in the political vocabulary of America—as unprecedented, as a surrender to capital or as a weak-kneed compliance with "the arrogance of labor." But the President did not hesitate then any more than he has hesitated now. He thought then, as now, of the general good, not of this "interest" or of that. He brought masters and men together; he imposed peace upon them.

Then, as now, he did what no other man could have done. And he did it, as he does everything, simply because it needed doing and because it was the right thing to do.

GOVERNORS FAVOR ROOSEVELT'S PLAN—WELCOME OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS CONSERVATION OF OUR NATURAL RESOURCES—CONFIDENT GOOD WILL COME—GOVERNOR BROOKS, OF WYOMING, THINKS, HOWEVER, THAT THE STATES THEMSELVES SHOULD CONTROL RESTRICTIVE MEASURES.

President Roosevelt's invitation to the governors of all the States to meet at the White House May 13, 14, and 15 to consider measures for the conservation of the country's natural resources has interested the chief executives of the various States. Almost without exception they approve of his plan.

Some of their letters to the Times are appended:

WANTS CONFERENCES OFTEN—WEST VIRGINIA'S EXECUTIVE HAS SUGGESTED SIMILAR PLAN BEFORE.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.
Charleston, November 22.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I heartily approve of the President's plan. I regret that the meeting can not be held before May. I have long thought that there ought to be an association of the governors of the several States and annual meetings held, and I had already taken up this question with several of the governors and had from them favorable responses. It seems to me much good would result to the public from such an association and meeting of the chief executives of the States. It would bring the States in closer touch and be the means of much useful information to the governors by exchange of ideas, and in many other ways, in my judgment, promote the public welfare.

In my message to the last legislature in this State I refer at some length to the waste of the natural resources of West Virginia. This waste occurs principally in our natural gas, oil, coal, and timber. Our State geologist estimates that in the last decade alone this State has lost $150,000,000 worth of natural gas from its needless escape into the air, and probably half as much more in value has been lost by the inexcusably wasteful methods of burning the gas for the producing of heat, light, and power.

The advantages of concerted action among the States in the effort to conserve the natural resources of the country are so apparent that no argument is needed to enforce them. We all learn from one another, and every man can be helped by his neighbor; and as men united in an organized effort to accomplish a purpose can do more than one man, so a united effort of the States or part of the States in an organized effort to prevent the waste of our natural resources would accomplish more than an effort anyone could make alone.

WILLIAM M. O. DAWSON,
Governor of West Virginia.

CONNECTICUT FAVORS PLAN—GOVERNOR WOODRUFF APPROVES THE MEETING AND WILL ATTEND.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Hartford, November 22.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I am directed by his excellency Governor Woodruff to say in reply to your inquiry of November 19 as to his views on the proposed gathering of governors at Washington next spring that he approves of such a conference. He believes that it would be to the advantage of the several States to have their executives meet for an exchange of ideas on such problems.

Governor Woodruff does not know what plan will be put forward for the conservation of the nation's natural resources, but he will attend the conference in the hope of learning in what way the State of Connecticut can assist in such plans as may be feasible, and in what way the State can benefit thereby. In the absence of more definite information than he now has he is not able to go into a discussion of the question at greater length.

CHARLES E. JULIN,
Executive Secretary.

WOULD BE OF VALUE—GOVERNOR GLENN, OF NORTH CAROLINA, THINKS CONFERENCE WOULD INFLUENCE CONGRESS.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, November 21.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I know nothing of the meeting of the governors in Washington next spring, save as contained in a letter to me from the President. The object of the President in calling us together is to have a full conference of the governors of every State regarding the conserving of the nation's natural resources, such as waterways, forests, mines, etc., in order that every aspect of the subject should be fully discussed and all information bearing upon these matters brought to the attention of the lawmaking power of the country. It seems to me that such a conference would naturally be of great benefit, and ideas could be advanced and suggestions for cooperation made that would have great influence with Congress and cause that body to take immediate steps to preserve our resources.

R. B. GLENN,
Governor of North Carolina.

WISDOM TO PROTECT FORESTS—FLORIDA'S GOVERNOR THINKS NATION SHOULD CONSERVE RESOURCES.

STATE OF FLORIDA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Tallahassee, November 23.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

There is no doubt in my mind but what the nation should take some steps to conserve the coal, iron, and timber contained in and upon the public domain. I also think it wise to protect especially the forests and shrubs near the headwaters of our streams, that the moisture there might be retained and the water supply conserved. I am also of the opinion that our water power ought to be conserved for the public by the nation.

I understand that private parties and corporations are endeavoring to secure the right to control many of our waterfalls in our great rivers and even in some streams for power purposes.

I also think that the President's suggestion to consider the clarification of water is a good one. If the sewage of our great cities is turned into our fresh-water streams near the headwaters of the same, to what extent the waters are polluted for the length of the river should be investigated and determined, and it may be found necessary to prevent the emptying of sewage into the fresh-water rivers of our country. As the protection of these resources can only be wrought through the legislative bodies of our country, one of the most effective methods of impressing them is by agitation. Therefore I look forward to the convention of governors, called by the President at the White House next spring for the consideration of this matter, as being a very important gathering from the standpoint not only of wise consideration of the problem but as a method of bringing before the public in a forcible way the very great importance of the matter.

N. B. BROWARD, Governor.

SHOULD BE AN AWAKENING—GOVERNOR JOHNSON SAYS PUBLIC SENTIMENT HAS BEEN TOO LONG ACQUIESCENT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
November 25.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I am not quite certain just what immediate results can be attained by the President's call for the meeting of the governors at the White House to discuss the conservation of the country's natural resources. Certain I am, however, that there should be an awakening of the public conscience on the matter.

Too long has public sentiment been acquiescent while our public domain has been denuded of its forest wealth, its mineral resources remorselessly and recklessly exploited, and its waters allowed to run away to the seas without let or hindrance. Generations have been prodigal of nature's resources, and there has been no thought of the inevitable time when posterity will anathematize our present-day recklessness.

The President's call for a conference of those who, from their official positions in the different Commonwealths, should assist in shaping public sentiment, should, and I believe will, give impetus to the proposition that we should not attempt to harvest in one generation what it has taken centuries to develop. Certainly in the scientific development of our waterways there can be some almost immediate effect of the proposed conference.

SUBJECT OF VITAL INTEREST—GOVERNOR HOCH BELIEVES IT THE GREATEST BUSINESS SCHEME EVER DEVISED.

STATE OF KANSAS,
Topeka, November 26.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

During our recent trip down the Mississippi with the President all the things set forth in the President's recent call for a proposed conference in Washington next May were discussed by the seventeen governors aboard the Alton.

At that time I gave my full and cordial indorsement to the scheme, and upon more mature reflection still believe it to be the greatest business scheme ever proposed in the United States. The conservation of our waters for irrigation and manufacturing purposes and their improvement for navigation purposes is in itself a gigantic undertaking.

But its importance forbids that we should falter because of its magnitude. The preservation and restoration of our timber lands is another subject of vital and vast importance. Add to these our national interest in the remaining public lands, mineral and agricultural, and we have a project, I repeat, surpassing in magnitude and importance any ever before proposed in this country. The proposed conference of governors and others interested in this great project ought to give it great impetus.

E. W. HOCH.

WANTS AMERICAN LABOR—GOVERNOR CUTLER, OF UTAH, SUGGESTS NEW PLAN FOR MINING INDUSTRY.

COMMONWEALTH OF UTAH, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Salt Lake, November 25.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

In my opinion the proposed gathering of the governors of the States at Washington next spring is one of the most important and can be made one of the most beneficial movements ever undertaken by our Government. I heartily approve of the idea of calling the governors together.

The following are some of the advantages which I think will come from this proposed conference: The broad general principle of conserving the nation's resources for the benefit of future generations will probably become unquestionably established in the minds of the governors who are not already converted to that idea and by them inculcated in the minds of the citizens of their States. And I believe there are a few governors who do not take the position that this conservation should be carried out, at least on the lines the Government is following.

After this general principle has been established, there is a possibility of much being done along certain specific lines. For example, the Government's forestry policy is being opposed in some sections, this opposition arising, I think, largely from lack of understanding. The removal of this misunderstanding and uniting of the governors in support of this policy I regard as a possible and very desirable result of the proposed conference. Another matter in which concerted action is needed is the sale of public lands, both agricultural and mineral. There is not much of the public domain still in the possession of the States, and that is the greater reason for the States settling on a policy, which, I am sure, the President favors, of selling the lands to bona fide settler instead of speculators. In this connection the matter of leasing coal lands, instead of selling them, may be profitably considered.

The subject of conserving the mineral deposits in the various States may also be taken up. I think it is time a policy is instituted of employing American labor exclusively in our mines and smelters, instead of giving employment to undesirable foreigners who never can become a part of our citizenship and whose chief purpose is to hoard all their wages except a mere pittance for their own support and carry their savings back to Italy, Austria, Greece, and other nations of southern Europe.

This is an element of conservation which could go under the broad title "American mines for American miners." Of all our resources our mines are preeminently liable to complete exhaustion, for they never can be renewed after being drained of their wealth. And I think it would be well for this conference to consider the advisability of following a better national policy in this matter, by means of which the mines, instead of being rapidly exhausted to the enrichment of undesirable foreigners, will be saved for American laborers and for future generations of American citizens and the building up of American institutions.

There are probably other matters that the President has in mind to bring before the proposed conference of equal importance with those here named. On the whole, I am in hearty accord with the idea.

JOHN C. CUTLER,
Governor of Utah.

TIME HAS COME TO SAVE—GOVERNOR HARRIS, OF OHIO, CONFIDENT THERE HAS BEEN GREAT WASTE.

STATE OF OHIO, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Columbus, November 21.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I have accepted the invitation of the President for the gathering of the governors of the States and of others at Washington next May. I am unable to express an opinion in advance as to what may be either the advantages or results of the conference. I am confident that there has been a great waste of the natural resources of our country in some of the minerals as well as in timbers, and that the time has come for the husbanding of our resources and also for the improvement of waterways.

COLORADO IN SYMPATHY—CENTENNIAL STATE WILL BE REPRESENTED AT THE CONFERENCE.

STATE OF COLORADO, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Denver, November 22.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I have hearty sympathy with the President's call for a meeting of the governors in May of 1908 at the White House. Colorado will be represented in that gathering. The President has stated the purposes of the conference with sufficient clearness.

HENRY A. BUCHTEL,
Governor of Colorado.

FOLK APPROVES PLAN—SAYS IT'S EASIER TO SAVE RESOURCES THAN RESTORE THEM.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR, STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of Jefferson, November 25.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Replying to your communication as to the proposed gathering of the governors of the States and Territories at Washington next spring, will say my view is that much good can come from such a meeting. It will be far easier to conserve the nation's natural resources now than it would be for the next generation to restore them after they are destroyed.

JOSEPH W. FOLK.

WILL EDUCATE THE PEOPLE.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Pierre, November 27.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

I approve of the proposal of the President for a gathering of the governors of the States at Washington next spring. In my opinion the advantages of a conference of governors and delegates in a voluntary meeting of this character for the purpose of discussing the conservation of the nation's natural resources are many. The question is one of vast importance.

The governors and accompanying delegates, coming fresh from the people from all parts of the United States, can no doubt, by discussion and interchange of ideas, call the attention of the people generally to the importance of the subject and stimulate healthful and beneficial legislation by the National Congress.

COE I. CRAWFORD,

ROCKEFELLER CLASS CHEERS MR. HUGHES—BOOM FOR THE GOVERNOR AS CANDIDATE FOR HIGHEST OFFICE APPLAUDED TO THE ECHO—MR. VANDERLIP ON FINANCE—DECLARES THAT RECENT CRISIS WAS RESULT OF INVESTIGATIONS WHICH MADE THE PUBLIC MIND SUSPICIOUS.

John D. Rockefeller, jr., acting as toastmaster at the eleventh annual dinner of the Young Men's Bible Class of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church at the Murray Hill Hotel last evening, plunged into politics for a moment, and launched a boom for Governor Hughes as a candidate for President of the United States.

In point of attendance and enthusiasm the dinner was the most successful the class has ever held. About two hundred men of different ages were present, the majority in evening dress, but a few, Mr. Rockefeller among them, in business suits.

In introducing the Rev. W. S. Richardson, the new leader of the class, as the first speaker, Mr. Rockefeller said:

"Many changes have taken place in this class, but the work goes on. One of the changes is that he who was once leader of the class is now governor of the State, and Mr. Troxell, our president, has for some years predicted that before long he would be invited to a Christmas or Thanksgiving dinner in the White House."

At this juncture every one in the room arose and gave three cheers for Governor Hughes, referring to him as the next President.

After addresses by Mr. Richardson and James Barnes, a speech was made by Frank A. Vanderlip, vice-president of the National City Bank, who reviewed in detail the recent financial crisis.

In explaining the cause, Mr. Vanderlip said much was due to the state of the public mind, suspicious as a result of a period of denunciation, of investigation, and of results in some of these investigations which he said furnished good ground for criticisms. The other cause he ascribed to exhausted capital due to tremendous industrial activity. When the demand was made on the banks, he said, they were forced to resort to clearing house certificates.

"Most people," he said, "think the function of the bank is to receive deposits of money to be returned to them when desired. That is the function of a safe deposit vault, not a bank. The business of a bank is really the interchange of credit. What the bank does is to take the credit of an individual, firm, or corporation and to give each his credit in return. A bank can not possibly be in a position, after using these deposits as loans, to pay up all the depositors' money at once or a very considerable part of it."

Mr. Vanderlip said the time was ripe to educate the public in financial affairs. He said a central bank, like the bank of Germany, might be a solution of the difficulty, though he did not think the majority of bankers here would favor it.

The Reverend Doctor Aked, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, made a humorous speech, ending by eulogizing the Reverend Mr. Richardson, the new leader of the class. Referring to Mr. Rockefeller, the former leader, he turned to that gentleman and said, "The King is dead! Long live the King!"

At the election of officers, which also took place, J. W. Troxell was again elected president and Mr. Rockefeller vice-president of the class.

[From Selz Weekly News.]

VIEWS UPON THE BUSINESS SITUATION.

Last week I spent two days in New York City, and three days in Pittsburg. I found the business situation in New York somewhat mixed. New York being the origin as well as the cause of the recent financial disturbance, I was very much interested to learn the average New Yorker's views of the situation, the cause of same, and his opinion of the effect. I found that every one with whom I talked seemed to feel President Roosevelt is to blame for the entire trouble, with which I immediately took issue; in fact, some went so far as to state openly that President Roosevelt was a menace to business.

When I asked for an explanation as to how President Roosevelt was a menace to business, and in what way he was the cause of the financial flurry, I was met with the same reply from every one, viz, that his various attacks on corporations had aroused distrust; this distrust had brought about a lack of confidence; the lack of confidence had caused runs on banks, which resulted in some good banks closing down, and compelling all others to go on a clearing house basis.

SOME QUESTIONS ASKED.

Upon asking the pointed question whether President Roosevelt had caused, first of all, the life insurance scandals, the reply was: "No; he had nothing at all to do with that."

Second, if he had caused the Alton Railway scandal; the reply was also: "No; he didn't do that."

Third, whether he was the cause of the New York Metropolitan traction scandal; the reply was: "No; he wasn't the cause of that."

Fourth, if he caused a lot of frenzied financiers to get control of some New York banks and loan money to themselves and to insiders on worthless collateral; the reply was: "No; he wasn't the cause of that."

I thereupon asked what he had done, and was informed he had talked against leading corporations, stating he was going to make them obey the laws.

I replied, "Where was the harm in that; should not they obey the laws?"

"Yes; they should, but they should not be held up publicly the way they were," was the response.

THE PRESIDENT HAS MADE GOOD.

"In other words," I said, "what you New Yorkers think he should have done where the trusts violated the Federal laws by taking rebates, and in other ways, was to have written them a courteous letter, stating he did not approve of their course. Well, President Roosevelt isn't built that way. When he took the oath of office years ago, President Roosevelt announced he as Chief Executive of this country, would see that the Federal laws were enforced against rich and poor alike; that he would treat everybody equally. The law-abiding citizen and the law-abiding corporation had nothing to fear, but that the dishonest rich would have to obey the laws or suffer the consequences." They admitted this. I then replied, "And he has made good," which is more than any President in recent times has done.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

The situation reminds me very much of a gang of thieves who have boarded a train for the purpose of robbing the passengers. There is one passenger aboard—an officer of the law—who has the courage to lay violent hands on them. A panic ensues; everybody makes a scramble for the door and in the rush to get away from the trouble some innocent panic-stricken people are hurt. The prisoners, when confronted with the result of their work, very blandly and naively say, "Don't blame us; this officer here has caused all the trouble and is to blame for the mad rush for the doors. We didn't hurt these people; he did, by stopping us in the noisy way that he did, instead of going about the matter quietly."

NOT THE USUAL "GRAND-STAND PLAY."

This appears to me to be the true state of affairs. I admit that President Roosevelt did not go at the matter in a very diplomatic manner; he did not write soft, loving, and kindly letters to the corporations that were violating the laws, but, as soon as he had the evidence, he proceeded against them in a court of justice, and stated in every speech that he made that this was what he proposed to do. The trouble is the trusts did not believe him; they thought it was the usual "grand-stand play" of the average politician they had heretofore been dealing with. In this President Roosevelt may have been wrong, but, in my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of the majority of business men in this country, he did perfectly right. The men in high places who betrayed their trusts, as did the officials of the life insurance company; the men who engineered the Alton Railroad deal, where they issued $90,000,000 worth of watered stocks and bonds on a $30,000,000 company; the brilliant frenzied financiers who disregarded all honesty and folsted on the public the Metropolitan Traction stocks after they had manipulated the stocks so as to enrich themselves with unheard-of millions; the daring financial buccaneers who got control of some of the principal banks and deliberately set about to take every dollar there was in the vaults, leaving worthless securities instead; these men are to blame and they alone for the loss of that confidence which the American people have a right to expect of men in high places.

FEDERAL LAWS SHOULD BE RESPECTED.

Had President Roosevelt allowed these things to go on, Federal laws would not be regarded any more sacred than some obsolete city ordinances are to-day, such as exceeding the automobile speed limit of 8 miles an hour, or selling liquor to a man already intoxicated. For the first time in the history of this country, we find the trusts have the most profound and utmost respect for the Federal laws against accepting rebates from railroads. I dare say there isn't a corporation in the United States to-day, if offered a rebate by a railroad official, that wouldn't immediately telephone for the police, where only a short time ago they would have accepted the offer without asking any questions.

SOME INNOCENT PERSONS HURT.

It is true, innocent people have been hurt by the President's bold stand, but in every movement of any consequence, where drastic action is necessary, a great many innocent suffer with the guilty; but one thing has been accomplished, which alone is worth the price that has been paid by the public; that is, there is to-day the most profound and absolute respect for Federal laws, and for the first time in years the greatest corporations and trusts in this country know they can not violate these laws with impunity. So much for the financial flurry and its causes; now for its after effects.

WE'VE HAD A MONEY SCARE.

Confidence can be destroyed in a week, but it takes a long time to build it up. There is considerable talk about the scarcity of money; as a matter of fact, there is no scarcity of money. A better and truer definition of the situation to-day would be a "money scare." There is more money in the country to-day than there was a year ago this time. There has been imported from Europe in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 in gold. The banks have increased their circulation to the extent of $134,000,000. The mines have produced untold millions in gold during the past year, and there is more money to-day in the United States than there has ever been before in its history. There is simply a "money scare." The banks are hoarding money, and individuals are hoarding money. If all of this money were released there would be more than enough to go around; a good deal more than there was a year ago when the supply seemed to be sufficient. Until currency is released there will be an apparent though not a real scarcity of money, but it will only be put into circulation again when confidence has been fully restored. Confidence is returning, though slowly; it will increase day by day, more rapidly as the true situation is understood. All that is needed now is for the banks to resume currency payments and for people to put their money into the banks instead of hoarding it.

CHICAGO BANKS ARE ALL RIGHT.

As an example, the Chicago banks on the last call of the Comptroller, show that they had more actual currency in the vaults than they ever had before; several of them reaching almost 50 per cent in cash resources. Chicago is in better financial condition to-day than any other city in the country, and I am told all that the Chicago bankers are waiting for is for the balance of the country to resume currency payments so that they will not be in danger of having all of their money drawn out by their country bank correspondents; but I understand from bank officials here that in the meanwhile they are not refusing to ship currency to the country where their bank correspondents ask for it. This is a sure sign of the return of confidence, and let us hope that New York, St. Louis, and Kansas City banks will soon be in as good shape as the Chicago banks are. It may be said to the credit of Chicago bankers that there has been less speculation, less inflation, and less investment in doubtful securities by Chicago bankers than in any other city in this country, and we predict they will be the gainers by it, by larger reserves being kept there by country banks than in New York City, where the money reserve of the country has heretofore been so recklessly invested.

GREAT WEALTH OF THE COUNTRY.

According to the editor of Dallas Farm and Ranch, Texas produced this year more than $200,000,000 in cotton and cotton products, $100,000,000 in corn; $120,000,000 in live stock, dairy, and poultry products, and more than $80,000,000 worth of miscellaneous agricultural products. The total contribution of the Texas farmer to the wealth of the country this year is more than $500,000,000.

The editor of the Minneapolis Farm, Stock and Home reports there were 4,000,000 more bushels of grain marketed in Minneapolis up to November 15 than were sold at the same market up to the same date a year ago, and that prices averaged 40 per cent higher.

Kansas looms up with $200,000,000 worth of grain and other products, and $165,000,000 in the banks, with which to move the crops. Kansas farmers never have known such a crop or such large bank rolls.

The editor of the Dakota Farmer reports that South Dakota produced $15,000,000 more crops in 1907 than in 1906, and that their banks show an increase in deposits of $12,723,000 over a year ago.

The editor of the Nebraska Farmer reports a hay crop valued at $38,000,000, the largest ever produced in the State, and a total value of $170,000,000 on the eight principal crops.

The editor of the Wallace's Farmer, of Iowa, reports a corn crop of 300,000,000 bushels, much higher in price than a year ago; a better hay crop, which is bringing good prices, and a good oat crop.

The editor of the Fruit Grower, of St. Joseph, Mo., reports a better crop and conditions much better than they were the year before.

The editor of the Rocky Mountain Husbandman says Montana never knew better agricultural conditions.

The editor of the Inland Empire, of the State of Washington, reports a total output for the year of $128,000,000, which makes an average, according to the population, of $1,000 to each family in the State.

Wisconsin is in prosperous condition. Illinois is busy with a big crop. Kentucky agricultural districts are prosperous.

The editor of the Indiana Farmer's Guide says Indiana farmers were never more contented or more prosperous than at present.

Ohio country banks are paying money more rapidly than the city institutions. Ohio agricultural districts are more than prosperous.

The Atlanta Constitution reports unusual prosperity in Georgia, with a price of 11 cents a pound on cotton and the prospect of 15 cents before spring. The value of the cotton crop in the Southern States is placed at $700,000,000. Not since the civil war has Georgia enjoyed such prosperity as now; and from all other States, except the strictly manufacturing States, we get the same reports.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry. Has the gentleman from Illinois announced that hereafter the five-minute rule shall be enforced and no debate shall be had except on the pending paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to go to that extent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Municipal building: For furnishing and equipping complete in every detail by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the new municipal building, for repairing and renewing old furniture, and cost of removal to new building, $107,000, to continue available until expended.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph. Why should this matter "continue available?"

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection whatever to striking out that provision, making it available until expended. The Commissioners reported that it might be necessary because of the fact that the purchase of the furniture, all of it, perhaps, could not be made during the remainder of this fiscal year, and it was intended that this appropriation should cover the entire cost of the furniture and equipment of the municipal building.

Mr. MANN. Has there been any provision made before?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "continue available."

Mr. MANN. You can not make that motion while the point of order is pending.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to my colleague that very little of the furniture could be had until the end of this fiscal year, and if you do not make it available then you might as well make no appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Has there been any appropriation for the furnishing of this building?

Mr. VREELAND. No.

Mr. MANN. Whose fault was it?

Mr. VREELAND. I do not know that it was anybody's fault.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean that it was any fault of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VREELAND. The building is not yet completed and will not be before July next. Congress has just met, after being absent for nine months, and the Commissioners have just made up the estimates and submitted them to the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is this furniture to be supplied before the building can be occupied?

Mr. TAWNEY. They expect to occupy it temporarily about the 1st of April.

Mr. VREELAND. It is partly occupied now.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to amend by striking out the word "expended" and inserting after the word "until" the words "the end of the next fiscal year."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, strike out the word "expended" and insert in lieu thereof "the end of the fiscal year 1909."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sewers: That appropriations heretofore made for the construction of sewers shall be available for the purchase and condemnation of such rights of way as may be required.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to reserve a point of order against that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to these facts: In the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the present fiscal year there was appropriated about $222,000 for construction and repairs of sewers. The Commissioners of the District have been anxious for years to have that fund available also for the purchase and acquisition by condemnation of rights of way. Upon the explanation that in the construction of sewers authorized it frequently becomes necessary to condemn rights of way, the cost of which was never expected to exceed $1,000, a provision was inserted in the bill authorizing the expenditure of $1,000 for that purpose. If this provision be retained in the bill, it makes available the entire appropriation for the construction of sewers, for the purchase or acquisition by condemnation of rights of way, or so much of it as they may wish to use. The Commissioners have at times requested authority to undertake the construction of sewers that the committee did not deem it advisable to initiate at the time, and I have not that confidence in the administration of the Government in the District of Columbia to put in the power of the men who are administering the affairs of the Government the authority to use as much money as could be used under such a provision. I understand it was shown in the hearings that in the condemnation of certain rights of way the verdict of a jury for $3,000 was rendered, and that there may be a deficiency for that amount, or a small amount more. If it be desired to give the Commissioners some small amount, or to make available some small amount, I have no objection; but I do object and will object to making available the entire appropriation for the construction of sewers, for the purchase or acquisition by condemnation of rights of way for sewers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say, for the information of the committee and the gentleman from New York, that the estimate as submitted by the District Commissioners applied not only to the existing appropriations for sewers, but applied to future appropriations. The word "hereafter" was stricken out, and the application of a part of the current appropriation for sewers was allowed in this case upon this state of facts: In the construction of a very large and important sewer in or in the vicinity of Anacostia condemnation proceedings were instituted and a judgment of $2,600 was obtained. The sum of $1,000 was all that they were allowed to use. Now the owner of this proposed right of way agreed to compromise by accepting $600 less than the amount of the verdict. In order that this work, which is now being delayed, may continue, the Commissioners desire authority to pay out of the current appropriation for sewers the sum of $3,000, the amount of the verdict less the discount which the owner of the right of way is willing to make, but including costs, etc.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the appropriation bill for the past fiscal year for sewers there were allotted, for mains and pipe sewers, $44,000; for suburban sewers, $100,000; for continuing work on extension of east side intersecting sewer from boundary sewer to Brookland, $50,000; for sewer in the valley of Broad Branch, between Rock Creek and Soapstone Branch, and in the valley of Soapstone Branch, between Broad Branch and Wisconsin avenue, $28,000.

The hearings in the preparation of the District of Columbia appropriation bill showed that from time to time there were insignificant amounts required in order to permit a sewer to be put through the corner of a lot; and $1,000 was allotted for that purpose; but under the language of the provision in the deficiency bill the Commissioners have the authority to utilize whatever may now be unexpended of the appropriations just mentioned for the purpose of purchasing rights of way and condemning rights of way. There are a number of sewers contemplated in the District of Columbia which, if this authority were granted, would result in the expenditure, contrary to the wish of Congress, of a very exorbitant amount of money for rights of way, instead of placing them through public thoroughfares and public places. I have no objection to a limitation upon this item for the amount that will be necessary, but I do object to this extraordinarily broad power being vested in the Commissioners.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the Commissioners, when before the committee, asserted to the committee that there was only this single instance where it was desired or where it would be necessary to draw upon the appropriations for the current year for sewers in order to pay for right of way. We accepted their word; this being the only case, and believing this was a meritorious case, and that $80,000 worth of sewer work is now awaiting the settlement of the controversy, we thought it wise to make the recommendation as we have.

Mr. MANN. How much is required to make up the balance to pay for the condemnation proceedings?

Mr. TAWNEY. The verdict, as I recollect it, is for $2,600, but there are some expenses. I think $3,000 was the maximum amount that the Commissioners informed the committee they would require in order to meet the necessities and in order that the work might go on.

Mr. MANN. Why not, if the gentleman from New York and others will permit, amend by saying that $3,000 out of the appropriation heretofore made may be used for this purpose, in taking care of this particular case, and not create a precedent that will go into every appropriation bill hereafter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call attention to the fact that the recommendation of the Commissioners contemplated only the use of $2,600 or $3,000, because in their recommendation they say the appropriation hereafter made; this is something they have been struggling to obtain for a long time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know they have, and it is something that the committee has refused to give them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My judgment is that the limitation should be placed on the amount that they may use under this provision.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from New York be willing to leave the item in, with an amendment inserted after the word "that," so as to read, "the sum of $3,000 out of the appropriation heretofore made?"

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Or so much as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. So it would permit them to use the sum necessary to go ahead with the sewer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that because it seems that for some reason or other, they will require the $3,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have the Chair rule on the proposition, on the point of order, and then if it is ruled out, we will endeavor to fix it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will now offer an amendment, if the gentleman from New York will consent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to giving them the $3,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it is necessary that they should have the $3,000. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 21, insert:

"SEWERS.

"Of the sum appropriated for sewers for the fiscal year 1908 not exceeding $3,000 may be used for procuring right of way for sewers."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reimbursement of J. Nota McGill and others: For the reimbursement of J. Nota McGill, Chapin Brown, Rufus H. Thayer, Robert C. Wilkins, and J. Wesley Bovee for amount expended for plumbing in the building for male employees in the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia, $391.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I insist that this is not subject to a point of order. This expenditure was made upon a building authorized by law, and I have here memoranda showing how the expenditure was made and why it was made. J. Nota McGill, Chapin Brown, Rufus H. Thayer, Robert C. Wilkins, and J. Wesley Bovee are the trustees appointed under authority of law for the control of the Reform School in the District of Columbia. This building was erected under their supervision and in accordance with law.

In 1893 Congress appropriated $6,000 for the erection and completion of a dormitory for male employees, to be erected in accordance with plans to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the inspector of buildings and the District Commissioners. Certain unavoidable delays were experienced and the plans were not perfected until during the past fiscal year of 1907. Owing to the increased cost of building material, it was found necessary in order to bring the expenditure within the appropriation to eliminate from the plans several important items, including plumbing and heating.

The changes in the plans were approved by the Supervising Architect, the inspector of building, and the District Commissioners, and the building was erected accordingly. It was found, however, that it could not be used without the installation of plumbing, and it was necessary that it be put into immediate use, as the men were then living in the stable. The matter was taken up with the Comptroller of the Treasury with a view of ascertaining whether or not any part of the maintenance funds could be employed to pay for this plumbing. As to this the Comptroller was in doubt, and thought the better plan would be for the members of the board of trustees to pay for the plumbing themselves and go to Congress for reimbursement, and this they did. These gentlemen have been without the money for several months, and they are claiming no interest, but only reimbursement for this outlay.

Those were the circumstances. Here was the incomplete building and the inmates of this institution were occupying a barn. Young men and boys were occupying the barn. The building was completed, but before it could be occupied this plumbing had to be done in order to make the building habitable. These men were acting under the authority of Congress and were the officers of the Government in respect to the control and supervision of this institution, and also with respect to the supervision and construction of this building, and I don't think the point of order lies.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman himself reads a paper which states that Congress made an appropriation of $6,000 for the erection and completion of a dormitory, and then adds that it is not complete unless it has plumbing in it.

Mr. TAWNEY. On plans that were to be approved, and the building was constructed in accordance with the plans as approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. The limit of cost of the building was $6,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And this amount is in addition to the $6,000?

Mr. MANN. It is in addition to the $6,000. Admit that this claim ought to be paid. It is a claim against the Government. But, Mr. Chairman, to say in the statute that you are going to pay a particular man is a change of existing law. That of itself would render the item obnoxious to the rules. If these people have a proper claim against the Government which can be paid at all by the Department officers, a proper method of reaching it is to make an appropriation for the deficiency, and not attempt without having the item go through the Auditor's Office, without having any Government official pass upon it, to say by the appropriation bill that it shall be paid because somebody says that they ought to have the money. That is practically what this letter says.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not a fair statement, and I submit it is hardly fair to gentlemen of the standing of these trustees who are contributing their time gratis to the Government for the benefit of this institution.

Mr. MANN. If I have said anything which reflects on these gentlemen, I retract it.

Mr. TAWNEY. These gentlemen, rather than to see the people under their control live in a barn—a stable—proceeded to pay this money out of their own pockets in order to complete the plumbing, thereby making the building habitable. I think they are to be commended for taking the course they did in order to afford convenient and comfortable quarters for the inmates of that institution rather than to be censured.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to say anything which reflects upon these men, although, now that the gentleman calls it to my mind, I think they might well have it said of them. Congress made an appropriation of $6,000 for the erection and completion of a dormitory. These men were in charge. What do they do? They proceeded to erect a dormitory without any plumbing to it at all, knowing that it was not habitable. They exceeded the appropriation, or expended the entire appropriation, knowing that when it was expended they would not have a building in which the help could be placed. I don't know but they are entitled to have criticism passed upon them. Congress determined the amount which should be applied on this building, and we had a right to suppose that these distinguished people in charge of the building would provide a habitable building out of the $6,000, and not a barn, as they say they have.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the trustees in this instance, whom the gentleman now does criticise, were instructed by law to construct this building in accordance with plans and specifications prepared by the supervising architect of the Capitol, the inspector of buildings, and the District Commissioners. These plans and specifications as prepared entirely eliminated plumbing; did not provide for plumbing.

Mr. MANN. It was done at their request—the elimination of plumbing.

Mr. TAWNEY. They therefore constructed the building in accordance with the law and not in violation of the law, as the gentleman from Illinois contends.

Now, while that building was being constructed there was not sufficient accommodations for all the inmates of the institution, and a part of them were temporarily provided with quarters in the barn, and in order that that condition might cease and that they might be provided with more comfortable quarters these men went on and provided for the plumbing which was necessary to the entire completion of the building, but, so far as the action of the trustees is concerned, they acted in accordance with the strict letter of the law, because upon a revision of the estimate or plans, which revision was made by the architect and approved by the Commissioners, the item of plumbing was eliminated.

Mr. MANN. Do the supervising architect and his assistants violate the law?

Mr. TAWNEY. They revised the plans——

Mr. MANN. And went beyond the appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing in the law that requires plumbing should be included in it any more than the law requires plumbing to be included in barracks and quarters. When we make an appropriation for barracks and quarters we appropriate money for the building, and then the Army pays the plumbing out of the appropriation for transportation of the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have changed that now.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman claim a dormitory building, which is not habitable when completed, complies with the law providing for the construction of a dormitory building?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not claiming anything except what the law expressly provides. The gentleman stated these gentlemen had violated the law in building a building exceeding the limit of cost. I say he is mistaken; they did nothing of the kind.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not mistaken about that at all. These gentlemen prepared plans, and when they found the plans which they had prepared would cost more than $6,000 they deliberately cut the plumbing for the purpose of doing just what they are trying to do now.

Mr. TAWNEY. These men had nothing whatever to do with the preparation of the plans.

Mr. MANN. It was at their request that plumbing was omitted from the plans——

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg your pardon——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to my friend from Illinois if this is not a very proper case to withdraw the point of order? These gentlemen have come nearer building a building for $6,000 than private individuals have been able to do during this period when material has been going up as it has. They have only exceeded it by some $391, and they have put their hands in their pockets and paid the amount in order to accommodate these people. It seems to me my friend from Illinois ought not to insist upon the point of order where the equities are so strong as they are here and the amount so small.

Mr. MANN. We know nothing about the claim but what these gentlemen say. The claim has never been audited, never been before a Department, or passed upon by any official of the Government; it is not approved in this case by the Department under which it comes.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman he might incorporate an amendment that the bill should be audited by the Department before the sum was paid; but it seems to me these gentlemen, having put their hands into their pockets and paid the bill, ought not to be relegated to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York it is not necessary to plead with the gentleman from Illinois, for if it goes out on the point of order I have it in another form in which it is in order.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentlemen being paid their money, but I shall object in all these cases, if I can, to specifying in an appropriation bill that certain people shall be paid money on claims which nobody has passed upon except the people themselves.

Mr. TAWNEY. The District Commissioners did approve of this payment.

Mr. MANN. The District Commissioners did approve? Why, they disavow all knowledge of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Where?

Mr. MANN. In your own hearings, taken before the gentleman himself, they stated they knew nothing about it, and the gentleman presented it to the District Commissioners.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is submitted in the Book of Estimates by the Commissioners.

Mr. MANN. Not by the District Commissioners.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw as a voluntary peacemaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will find in the hearings that the president of the District Commissioners stated to him that he knew nothing about the claim, and the gentleman presented to the president a letter from these people stating the claim ought to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The pending section provides for reimbursement of certain persons for an amount expended for plumbing in the building for male employees in the Reform School for Girls in the District of Columbia. Congress authorized, the Chair understands, the construction of this building at the limited cost of $6,000. The amount called for in this section is in excess of that amount, and it seems to the Chair it is a claim against the Government, and is a claim that must be audited by the proper authorities before it can be an order upon a general appropriation bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 17, insert:

"The Reform School for Girls: To pay for plumbing in the building for male employees in the Reform School for Girls, authorized in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1904, $391."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14766, the urgent deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform and ordered to be printed.

[For President's message see Senate proceedings of to-day.]

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HAWLEY, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence from February 3, 1908, until he can return from Oregon, on account of the requirement of primary nomination law, which requires registration in person as a prerequisite of being nominated again for the office of Congressman.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON COMBINATIONS AND TRUSTS.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the resolution adopted at the National Conference on Combinations and Trusts, held in Chicago October 22–25, 1907. I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted at the National Conference on Combinations and Trusts, Chicago, October 22–25, 1907.

After twenty years of Federal legislation as interpreted by the courts, directed against the evils of trusts and combinations and against railroad rebates, beginning with the interstate-commerce act of 1887 and the antitrust act of 1890, a general and just conviction exists that the experience gained in enforcing these Federal acts and others succeeding them demonstrates the necessity of legislation which shall render more secure the benefits already gained and better meet the changed conditions which have arisen during a long period of active progress, both in the enforcement of statute law and in the removal of grave abuses in the management of railroads and corporations. These changes now demanded are:

First. Immediate legislation is required, following the recommendation of President Roosevelt and the Interstate Commerce Commission, permitting agreements between railroad corporations on reasonable freight and passenger rates, subject in all respects to the approval, supervision, and action of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Second. The enforcement of the Sherman Act and the proceedings under it during the administrations of Presidents Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley, and Roosevelt have accomplished great national results in awakening the moral sense of the American people and in asserting the supremacy and majesty of the law, thus effectually refuting the impression that great wealth and large corporations were too powerful for the impartial execution of law. This great advance has rendered more secure all property rights, resting, as they must, under a popular government, on universal respect for and obedience to law. But now that this work is accomplished it has revealed the necessity for legislation which shall maintain all that the Sherman Act was intended to secure and safeguard interests it was never expected to affect.

As the next step in executing the determination of the American people to secure in all industrial and commercial relations justice and equality of opportunity for all, with full sympathy and loyal support for every effort to enforce the laws in the past, we urge upon Congress without delay to pass legislation providing for a nonpartisan commission in which the interests of capital, of labor, and of the general public shall be represented. This commission, like a similar commission, which proved most successful in Germany in 1870, shall consider the entire subject of business and industrial combinations and report such proposals as to the formation, capitalization, management, and regulation of corporations (so far as the same may be subject to Federal jurisdiction) as shall preserve individual initiative, competition, and the free exercise of a free contract in all business and industrial relations. Any proposed legislation should also include modification of the prohibition now existing upon combinations on the following subjects:

1. National and local organizations of labor and their trade agreements with employers relating to wages, hours of labor, and conditions of employment.

2. Associations made up of farmers, intended to secure a stable and equitable market for the products of the soil, free from fluctuations due to speculation.

3. Business and industrial agreements or combinations whose objects are in the public interest as distinguished from objects determined to be contrary to the public interest.

4. Such commission should make a thorough inquiry into the advisability of inaugurating a system of Federal license or incorporation as a condition for the entrance of certain classes of corporations upon interstate commerce and also into the relation to the public interest of the purchase by one corporation of the franchises or corporate stock of another.

On no one of these subjects must what has been gained be sacrificed until something better appears for enactment. On each this conference recognizes differences between good men. On all it asks a national nonpartisan commission to be appointed next winter to consider the question and report at the second session of the approaching Congress for such action as the National Legislature, in the light of this full investigation, may enact.

Third. The examination, inspection, and supervision of great producing and manufacturing corporations, already begun by the Department of Commerce and Labor and accepted by these corporations, should be enlarged by legislation requiring, through the appropriate bureaus of the Department of Commerce and Labor, complete publicity in the capitalization, accounts, operations, transportation charges paid, and selling prices of all such producing and manufacturing corporations whose operations are large enough to have a monopolistic influence. This should be determined and decided by some rule and classification to be devised by the commission already proposed.

Fourth. The conflicts between State and Federal authority raised in many States over railroad rates, being now under adjudication and under way to a final and ultimate decision by the Federal Supreme Court, this conference deems the expression of an opinion on these issues unfitting, and confidently leaves this great issue to a tribunal which for one hundred and eighteen years has successfully preserved the balance between an indissoluble union and indestructible States, defining the supreme and national powers of the one and protecting the sovereign and individual powers of the other.

Mr. BURROWS presented a memorial of the general conference of the Seventh-Day Adventists, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists respectfully represent that the body of Christian believers with which they are connected, the Seventh-Day Adventists, and whose views they represent, has a growing membership residing in every State and Territory in the Union; that nearly all these members are native-born American citizens, and that it is supporting missionaries and has a following in every continent of the world. It is a Protestant body, which was established in this country about sixty years ago.

We recognize the authority and dignity of the American Congress as being the highest lawmaking power in the land, to whose guidance and fostering care have been committed the manifold interests of this great country, and our justification for presenting this memorial to your honorable body is that we are not seeking to direct your attention to any private or class concerns, but to principles which are fundamental to the stability and prosperity of the whole nation. We therefore earnestly ask your consideration of the representation which we herewith submit.

We believe in civil government as having been divinely ordained for the preservation of the peace of society and for the protection of all citizens in the enjoyment of those inalienable rights which are the highest gift to man from the Creator. We regard properly constituted civil authority as supreme in the sphere in which it is legitimately exercised, and we conceive its proper concern to be "the happiness and protection of men in the present state of existence, the security of the life, liberty, and property of the citizens, and to restrain the vicious and encourage the virtuous by wholesome laws, equally extending to every individual." As law-abiding citizens we seek to maintain that respect for authority which is the most effective bulwark of just government, and which is especially necessary for the maintenance of republican institutions upon an enduring basis.

We heartily profess the Christian faith, and have no higher ambition than that we may consistently exemplify its principles in our relations to our fellow men and to the common Father of us all. We cheerfully devote our time, our energies, and our means to the evangelization of the world, proclaiming those primitive principles and doctrines of the gospel which were interpreted anew to mankind by the Saviour of the world, and which were the fundamental truths maintained by the church in apostolic times. We regard the Holy Scriptures as the sufficient and infallible rule of faith and practice, and consequently discard as binding and essential all teachings and rituals which rest merely upon tradition and custom.

While we feel constrained to yield to the claims of civil government and religion, as both being of divine origin, we believe their spheres to be quite distinct the one from the other, and that the stability of the Republic and the highest welfare of all citizens demand the complete separation of church and state. The legitimate purposes of government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," are clearly defined in the preamble of the national Constitution to be to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty" to all. All these aims are of a temporal nature and grow out of the relations of man to man. The founders of the nation, recognizing that "the duty which we owe our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can only be directed by reason and conviction, and is nowhere cognizable but at the tribunal of the Universal Judge," wisely excluded religion from the concerns of civil government, not because of their indifference to its value, but because, being primarily a matter of the heart and conscience, it did not come within the jurisdiction of human laws or civil compacts. The recognition of the freedom of the mind of man and the policy of leaving the conscience untrammeled by legislative enactments have been abundantly justified by a record of national development and prosperity which is unparalleled in history. This is the testimony of our own experience to the wisdom embodied in the principle enunciated by the Divine Teacher of Christianity: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's."

We therefore view with alarm the first indication of a departure from this sound principle. In the history of other nations of the world, where church and state have been united to a greater or less degree, or where the struggle to separate them is now in progress, we have a warning, ofttimes written in blood, against the violation of this doctrine which lies at the foundation of civil and religious liberty. We affirm that it is inconsistent with sound reasoning to profess firm adherence to this principle of the separation of church and state, and at the same time endeavor to secure an alliance between religion and the state, since the church is simply religion in its organized and concrete expression; and, furthermore, that the same authority which can distinguish between the different religions demanding recognition, and give preference to one to the exclusion of the others, can with equal right and equal facility distinguish between the different denominations or factions of the same religion, and dispense to one advantages which it denies to the others. These considerations ought to make it doubly clear that what God has put asunder man ought not to attempt to join together.

A more specific reference to an important period of history may illustrate and enforce the affirmations herein set forth. Under a complete union of a heathen religion and the state, with extreme pains and penalties for dissenters, the first disciples, directed by the Divine commission, proclaimed the doctrines of Christianity throughout the Roman Empire. For nearly three centuries the warfare of suppression and extinction was waged by this haughty power, glorying in the superiority of its own religion, against nonresistant, but unyielding adherents to the right to worship according to the dictates of their own consciences. Then came a reversal of the unsuccessful policy, and what former emperors had vainly sought to destroy, Constantine, as a matter of governmental expediency, embraced, and Christianity became the favored religion.

Then began that period of "indescribable hypocrisy" in religion, and of sycophancy and abuse of power in the state. "The apparent identification of the state and the church by the adoption of Christianity as the religion of the Empire altogether confounded the limits of ecclesiastical and temporal jurisdiction. The dominant party, when it could obtain the support of the civil power for the execution of its intolerant edicts, was blind to the dangerous and un-Christian principle which it tended to establish. * * * Christianity, which had so nobly asserted its independence of thought and faith in the face of heathen emperors, threw down that independence at the foot of the throne, in order that it might forcibly extirpate the remains of paganism and compel an absolute uniformity of Christian faith."—Milman.

"To the reign of Constantine the Great must be referred the commencement of those dark and dismal times which oppressed Europe for a thousand years. * * * An ambitious man had attained to imperial power by personating the interests of a rapidly growing party. The unavoidable consequences were a union between church and state, a diverting of the dangerous classes from civil to ecclesiastical paths, and the decay and materialization of religion."—Draper.

Succeeding decades bore testimony to the fact that "the state which seeks to advance Christianity by the worldly means at its command may be the occasion of more injury to this holy cause than the earthly power which opposes it with whatever virulence."—Neander.

It was but a series of logical steps from the union of church and state under Constantine to the Dark Ages and the Inquisition, some of these steps being the settlement of theological controversies by the civil power, the preference of one sect over another, and the prohibition of unauthorized forms of belief and practice, and the adoption of the un-Christian principle that "it was right to compel men to believe what the majority of society had now accepted as the truth, and, if they refused, it was right to punish them."

All this terrible record, the horror of which is not lessened nor effaced by the lapse of time, is but the inevitable fruit of the acceptance of the un-Christian and un-American doctrine so inimical to the interests of both the church and the state that an alliance between religion and civil government is advantageous to either. If the pages of history emphasize one lesson above another, it is the sentiment uttered on a memorable occasion by a former President of this Republic: "Keep the state and the church forever separate."

The American colonists, who had lived in the mother country under a union of the state and a religion which they did not profess, established on these shores colonial governments under which there was the closest union between the state and the religion which they did profess. The freedom of conscience which had been denied to them in the old country, they denied to others in the new country; and uniformity of faith, church attendance, and the support of the clergy were enforced by laws which arouse righteous indignation in the minds of all liberty-loving men of this century.

The pages of early American history are stained with the shameful record of the persecution which must always attend the attempt to compel the conscience by enforcing religious observances. The Baptists were banished, the Quakers were whipped, good men were fined or exposed to public contempt in the stocks, and cruel and barbarous punishments were inflicted upon those whose only crime was that they did not conform to the religion professed by the majority and enforced by the colonial laws. And all these outrages were committed in the name of justice, as penalties for the violation of civil laws. "This was the justification they pleaded, and it was the best they could make. Miserable excuse! But just so it is: Wherever there is such a union of church and state, heresy and heretical practices are apt to become violations of the civil code, and are punished no longer as errors in religion, but as infractions of the laws of the land."—Baird. Thus did the American colonies pattern after the governments of the Old World, and thus was religious persecution transplanted to the New World.

We respectfully urge upon the attention of your honorable body the change which was made when the National Government was established. The men of those times learned the meaning and value of liberty, not only of the body, but also of the mind, and "vindicating the right of individuality even in religion, and in religion above all the new nation dared to set the example of accepting in its relations to God the principle first divinely ordained of God in Judea."—Bancroft. Warned by the disastrous results of religious establishments in both the Old and the New World, these wise builders of state excluded religion from the sphere of the National Government in the express prohibition, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Thus they founded a nation, the first in all history, upon the Christian idea of civil government—the separation of church and state. And the century and more of liberty and prosperity which has crowned their efforts, and the widespread influence for good which the example of this nation has exerted upon the world at large in leading the way toward freedom from the bondage of religious despotisms and ecclesiastical tyrannies, has demonstrated the wisdom of their course. The "new order of things" to which testimoney is borne on the reverse side of the Great Seal of the United States introduced an era of both civil and religious liberty which has been marked by blessings many and great both to the nation and to religion.

We are moved to present this memorial, however, because of the persistent and organized efforts which are being made to secure from Congress such legislation as will commit the National Government to a violation of this great principle, and to the enforcement of a religious institution. Already there have been introduced during the present session of Congress five bills of this nature:

S. 1519. A bill to prevent Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters.

H. R. 4897. A bill to further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia.

H. R. 4929. A bill prohibiting labor on buildings, etc., in the District of Columbia on the Sabbath day.

H. R. 13471. A bill prohibiting work in the District of Columbia on the first day of the week, commonly called "Sunday."

S. 3940. A bill requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday.

While a merely cursory reading of the titles of these bills may not indicate clearly their full significance, we affirm that an examination of their provisions will reveal the fact that they involve the vital principle of the relation of government to religion. Their passage would mark the first step on the part of the National Government in the path of religious legislation—a path which leads inevitably to religious persecution. If Government may by law settle one religious controversy and enforce one religious institution, it may logically settle all religious controversies and enforce all religious institutions, which would be the complete union of church and state and an established religion. We seek to avoid the consequences by denying the principle. We are assured that the only certain way to avoid taking the last step in this dangerous experiment upon our liberties is to refuse to take the first step.

We hold it to be the duty of civil government to protect every citizen in his right to believe or not to believe, to worship or not to worship, so long as in the exercise of this right he does not interfere with the rights of others; but "to pretend to a dominion over the conscience is to usurp the prerogative of God." However desirable it may seem to us who profess the Christian faith to use the power of government to compel at least an outward respect for Christian institutions and practices, yet it is contrary to the very genius of Christianity to enforce its doctrines or to forge shackles of any sort for the mind. The Holy Author of our religion recognized this great principle in these words: "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not." The triumphs of the Gospel are to be won by spiritual, rather than by temporal, power; and compulsion may be properly employed only to make men civil.

Therefore, in the interest of the nation, whose prosperity we seek; in the interest of pure religion, for whose advancement we labor; in the interest of all classes of citizens whose rights are involved; in the interest of a world-wide liberty of conscience, which will be affected by the example of this nation; in the interest even of those who are urging this legislation, who are thereby forging fetters for themselves as well as for others, we earnestly petition the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, not to enact any religious legislation of any kind whatsoever, and particularly not to pass the bills to which reference has been made in this memorial. And for these objects your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

DEAR SIR: We, whose names are undersigned, members of a ministerial society in the city of New York known as Chi Alpha, voicing, as we believe, the sentiments of many thousands of American citizens, respectfully express to you our earnest hope that the present Congress will call a halt in what seems to us the needless and hazardous enlargement of the United States Navy.

Believing that America should be the leader among the peacemakers of the earth, we can not but look with regret and alarm on the further multiplication of battle ships, not only because of the disastrous influence which this is likely to have upon the temper and fortunes of our own people, but because it is wellnigh certain to retard that reduction in the armaments of nations for which a sorely burdened world has long been waiting.

RESERVOIR ON ROARING FORK RIVER, COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. On the 20th of this month I presented a joint memorial of the legislature of Colorado, and had it referred to the Committee on Irrigation. That committee believe that the memorial should have been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, as they think it concerns administration rather than legislation. Therefore I ask leave to have it referred to the Secretary of the Interior. I should like to have the notice to the Secretary put into the RECORD, so as to show how it comes to go to him.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Irrigation be discharged from the further consideration of the House joint memorial No. 3, passed by the sixteenth general assembly of the State of Colorado, and referred to the committee on January 20, 1908, and that the same be transmitted by the Secretary to the Secretary of the Interior.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I, perhaps, should offer a word of explanation in regard to the resolution.

The committee do not make a practice of reporting resolutions referring bills to the Court of Claims except at the close of a session, when they usually report what we call an "omnibus resolution." These particular bills were referred to the Court of Claims at the last session, but it was found that they were not in proper form to permit the court to take the cases into consideration or to adjudicate them and report findings. Therefore the Senators who had introduced them at the last session of the Senate reintroduced them at the present session and requested that they be rereferred to the Court of Claims. Hence we have deviated from the rule we have usually followed and report them at this time.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a bill which was sent to me by the Dairyman's Association of the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia. I understand that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are likewise to submit a bill, regulating this very important product. For the purpose of having the matter in such shape that the committee can readily consider it, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the accompanying letter from the Dairyman's Association be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The bill will be printed separately, of course, in the usual form.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I notice that the Chair submitted to the Senate during the morning hour the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to Senate resolution No. 33 of December 12, 1907. On the desks of Senators I find also a printed pamphlet dated January 29, 1908, which purports to be either the response referred to or a portion of it. I desire to ask the Chair if there is any other portion of the response of the Secretary of the Treasury submitted this morning which is not contained in this printed pamphlet?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not examined the pamphlet to which the Senator refers nor has he examined in detail the report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. My experience, Mr. President, in this Chamber is not by any means as extensive as that of many others here, but I do not recall since I have been in the Senate, and after conversation with others longer in the service they do not recall, an instance in which the head of a Department of the Government has answered a Senate resolution in printed form, distributed among Senators in the fashion in which this has been to-day.

I have not had time to examine it, but it occurs to me that there is some portion of the response of the Secretary which is not included in this printed pamphlet. For instance, on page 1 it says, "The information furnished embraces." Then follow eighteen paragraphs consisting of references to various matters, letters, list of national-bank bidders, etc., which do not appear in this paper.

I wanted to invite attention to it and to ask if the full response contains the enumerations which are referred to in the printed pamphlet we have on our desks this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury was in two packages, and the Senate ordered the report printed.

Mr. CULBERSON. But the point I was suggesting is that the Secretary of the Treasury apparently had anticipated the action of the Senate in ordering this paper printed and had it printed himself, taking upon himself the responsibility which has heretofore, according to the precedents, devolved upon the Senate itself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state for the further information of the Senator from Texas that he is advised the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, submitted by the Chair to the Senate, is on its way to the Public Printer, by the order of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I notice the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on his feet. He is a great stickler for Senatorial dignity and the maintenance of our rights. I ask him, for information, Has it ever occurred before that a Cabinet officer has transmitted a reply to a Senate resolution in print?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had no intention, as I was about to leave the Chamber, of saying anything on this question. But since the Senator from South Carolina asks me I will state that I do not know whether a Cabinet officer ever sent in a letter of transmittal as a matter of convenience printed, and I do not think it is the slightest matter whether he ever did.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course the Senator would say that. I took it for granted he would say that.

Mr. LODGE. It is a great convenience to the Senate to have the letter of transmittal in this form. The letter and all the papers will be printed to-morrow in one volume, by the order of the Senate. In the meantime this print is sent here for the convenience of Senators. I can not conceive of anything more reasonable or more proper.

Mr. TILLMAN. The question is as to the legality.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it is legal. He can communicate in print, in typewriting, or in handwriting.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Government pay for it before the Senate orders it?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, all the Departments have a right to have printing done, and they have offices for that purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that all the reports of heads of Departments, made in accordance with law, are made in print to this body. Invariably that is the case.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is made in answer to a Senate resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Still it is in the nature of a report. It is in answer to a Senate resolution, and it is made in print for the convenience of Senators.

Mr. TILLMAN. It may be a small matter, Mr. President, but I am just old fogy enough to recall that it never has occurred before, and it appears to me that it is somewhat along the line of assuming the airs of a President before this gentleman is elected there. The President has sent his message here printed beforehand for our convenience, so that we can read it along with the reading at the desk, but I have never known a Cabinet officer to assume to do it.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair will recall that I rose for the purpose of inquiring if this printed pamphlet contained all the response of the Secretary of the Treasury. Incidentally I mentioned that in my experience, and in that of other Senators with whom I had conferred, it had not been customary for Cabinet officers to communicate to the Senate in this form. But my inquiry has not yet been answered. It is, Does this pamphlet include all the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury, and if it does not, why does it not include it, since he saw proper to print any portion of it?

Mr. LODGE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I thought he had finished.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is my inquiry, and the Chair does not seem to be able to answer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state again that the Chair has not examined the report which the Senator from Texas has in his hand, nor did he examine the report of the Secretary of the Treasury which he submitted to the Senate and which the Senate ordered printed, and which report is now on its way to the Government Printing Office; nor does the Chair understand that it is his province to make a comparison between the report laid before the Senate by him and the pamphlet in the hands of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I beg the pardon of the Chair. I assumed that the Chair knew more about the answer of the Secretary, under the circumstances, than he did.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can answer the Senator's question, if he desires to have it answered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. The response of the Secretary of the Treasury shows on its face that there are 18 voluminous statistical reports and tables which accompany this report, and they have gone to the Public Printing Office to be printed. I think it will take about twenty-four hours to get them into type. They were in manuscript.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why was this pamphlet printed at all, then?

Mr. ALDRICH. These are to be printed at the Government Printing Office. This pamphlet was printed undoubtedly for the convenience of the Secretary in the first instance, and probably for the convenience of the Senate in the second instance. There is a printing office in the Treasury Department where they do this printing. The Senator from South Carolina has been extremely anxious to have this information.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have, and I have waited for it since the 12th of December and the last of January has come. I have been waiting for it a long time, and when it does come, instead of printing it all the Secretary prints a part of it and sends the balance in manuscript.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the fact that it comes here in printed form the Senator will be able to examine it now. It will no doubt be twenty-four hours before it comes from the Government Printing Office. I think it is a matter of convenience.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am much more concerned about the facts than I am about the Secretary's defense of his action. I do not care three straws for his vindication, or attempted vindication, for transgressing the law and doing what he knows he had no right to do. I want the facts.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, just a moment. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests that the full document has been sent to the Government Printing Office to be printed. The document which we have before us was printed at the Government Printing Office. So that specious argument is of no consequence.

Nor is there anything in this pamphlet to which I have been able to refer in the limited time since my attention was called to it showing that there is any other portion of the report yet to be seen by the Senate. The Senator from Rhode Island says there is, and we accept that, but the fact remains that the Secretary of the Treasury has printed beforehand his argument and left to be printed afterwards the statement of facts which accompanies it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the situation presented this morning is somewhat extraordinary, it seems to me. For several weeks we have heard constant importunity and exhortation addressed to the Senator from Rhode Island and demand made in more or less emphatic form of all persons assumed to be responsible for an immediate answer from the Secretary of the Treasury to the resolution presented by the Senator from Texas.

Manifestly, Senators desired information at the earliest possible date. As stated repeatedly by the Senator from Rhode Island, the collation of the facts required much time. The statistical tables are voluminous. It required the investigation of national-bank deposits in every State and Territory in the Union; it required that the facts should be tabulated and put in convenient form for the information of Senators in quest of the information.

Now, after all this information has been put in form for the printer, it is objected that the Secretary of the Treasury has been superserviceable in giving his reasons for the action complained of, referring merely to the exhibits which are now in the hands of the Government Printer and which will no doubt in the course of a few days be printed.

Had the Secretary of the Treasury delayed the additional days necessary to print the schedules or exhibits attached to this report, he would, as usual, have been criticised this morning most severely for the long-continued and inexplicable delay. He comes forward with his reasons succinctly and satisfactorily stated, no doubt, and yet the Senator from South Carolina has condemned the Secretary of the Treasury before reading his answer to the Senate resolution.

Mr. President, this zeal of the Secretary of the Treasury, this explicit manner of placing his reply before the entire Senate at the earliest possible day, is now made the subject of criticism. How in the world could the Secretary of the Treasury please the Senator from Texas or the Senator from South Carolina if his zeal in presenting the report is in itself as offensive as was his action in taking reasonable time to prepare it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that the single criticism of the Senator from South Carolina was finally as to the airs which the Secretary of the Treasury had assumed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, certainly; with much pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator desires to know what would satisfy the Senator from South Carolina. I will tell him very frankly. It is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall comply with the Senate resolution in the orderly manner of all his predecessors, and that when asked for information he shall send it here like any other man under our authority, and let us print it if we see fit. The Senator from Montana can not point to a solitary instance in the history of this Government when this has been done before.

Mr. CARTER. I recall very distinctly that many years ago a motion was made to dismiss an appeal in the supreme court of Montana upon the ground that the notice of appeal was not in writing, being typewritten instead of being written by hand. I found that that question had been raised once in New York. It is now raised in the Senate. The fact that the report is printed seems to be objectionable.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Montana contend that this is a full report? Is it only a part of it and the argument, without regard to the facts? Why not send it all in manuscript or typewriting, or send it all in print?

Mr. CARTER. This is a full and complete report, referring to certain voluminous exhibits, which exhibits are now in the hands of the Printer, and they will be in the possession of the Senate in due course of time.

In further reply to the Senator from South Carolina, permit me to suggest that never in the history of the Senate, under my observation, has there been such insistence upon the immediate presentation of a report as in this case.

Mr. TILLMAN. And never in the history of the Senate has there been such an unaccountable delay in giving us the information we had a right to call for. And the Senator from Montana, knowing that the Secretary of the Treasury has been off to New York making speeches, and then takes two weeks after his speech to come forward with this labored defense, gets up and undertakes to vindicate or justify an act which has never occurred before in the history of the Government.

Mr. CARTER. Manifestly the Senator from South Carolina has not read the report.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I have not had time to read it.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly. It may not be a labored report. It may be a very fluently prepared and a very satisfactory report, skillfully worded in a free off-hand style, and it may be entirely satisfactory, perchance, to the Senator from South Carolina, who is fair-minded and just. Notwithstanding, he has announced his hostile view, it may be that before the sun goes down to-day he will agree that the Secretary of the Treasury has fully explained this matter to his entire satisfaction.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Montana will divorce himself from partisanship and the active defense of his friend, the Secretary of the Treasury, he will be compelled to acknowledge that the Secretary of the Treasury, no matter what he may have given us in the way of defense, has transgressed the law in the issue of those bonds. I ask him now, Does he vindicate and pretend to justify the issue of the Panama bonds and the 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. CARTER. Having called upon the officer who is primarily responsible for the issuance of the bonds for information, I withhold my judgment until all the facts and circumstances and conditions shall have been fully considered.

Now, Mr. President, I object to the word "partisanship" in this connection. Every Presidential candidate in this country will bear me witness that I have not been in any case a partisan. The Senator from South Carolina has ventured to say that this pamphlet indicated that the Secretary of the Treasury was assuming Presidential airs somewhat prematurely, and therefore suggestion of partisanship would indicate that I am flying to the rescue of a Presidential candidate, when I am sure, on consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and all other candidates, he will find I stand entirely acquitted of any such charge.

This is a case, Mr. President, that does not require much consideration. Senators are objecting to a matter of form and not of substance in making the criticism. This reply, printed and accessible at the earliest moment the Secretary of the Treasury could present it here, is objectionable because it has covers upon it and is printed in pamphlet form. It does look somewhat like the Presidential messages as they are finally sent forth to the public. But, Mr. President, there is no transgression of the rules of the Senate, because the report came here in an orderly manner, just as other reports come. The Secretary of the Treasury doubtless consulted the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from day to day and was advised of the extreme and intense desire of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from South Carolina to get at the facts at the earliest moment, and therefore he had printed in the Government office in the Treasury Department the report which we have before us.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are there any facts in this pamphlet?

Mr. CARTER. I have no doubt the report——

Mr. TILLMAN. Are there any facts here called for by the Senate?

Mr. CARTER. The report is surcharged with facts. It is full of facts.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is full of assertions, perhaps.

Mr. CARTER. And of facts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I thought the Chair made a very complete explanation of the situation on the inquiry which was made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that the reply came in the usual way accompanying certain elaborate exhibits. This letter of transmittal, in pamphlet form, summarizing what is in those exhibits, is nothing but what is done by every head of a Department whenever he makes an annual report, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has already pointed out. Every year the Secretary of War, for example, sends in his annual report in pamphlet form, which is often distributed here some days beforehand, and then come in the detailed reports and exhibits, which fill volumes and require some time to print.

Moreover, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], in his zeal for the law and the Constitution, forgets that the Secretary of the Treasury is the one head of a Department who is authorized by law to make communications to Congress on his own motion and in his own way. I am not aware that the law prevents his putting that communication, when he sends it in, in writing and also in pamphlet form for the convenience of Members of both Houses. It is a perfectly natural thing to do. I have not the slightest question we could find endless precedents in addition to those which occur every year when the heads of Departments send in letters of transmittal, and I confess I am surprised, Mr. President, at the annoyance of the Senator from South Carolina. I know no one who is so constantly pleading for light. He is always wanting light, and he has been particularly anxious to have light on this dark place——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. But when we begin to "cheer the clouded mind with light divine" he immediately resists. He objects to have light shed unless it is all shed at once and in his own particular way; and because it begins with a partial illumination, he feels that the Constitution and the laws and the privileges of the Senate are in danger.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I think, Mr. President, that it is a great advantage to have the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury in this convenient form, summarizing the exhibits which will be in our hands to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. I yield the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts assert that there is any light between the sheets of this pamphlet?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Light, light, light! Do not go off on something else. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Yes, Mr. President; I think there is an abundance of light in it, but whether the Senator from South Carolina will be able to see it I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. And, undoubtedly, if the brilliant mind of the Senator from Massachusetts can not see it before I do, nobody will ever see it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, as I appear to have provoked the running debate on this subject, I desire to recall to the Senate that my inquiry originally was whether the pamphlet laid on our desks constitutes the entire response of the Secretary of the Treasury to the resolution of the Senate. It appears, from a further examination of it which I have made, that it does not. The Secretary says:

> I have the honor to transmit, in accordance with the direction of the President, the detailed statements which accompany this communication.

Then he recites the resolution of the Senate, after which he adds:

> The information furnished embraces—

A number of documents, aggregating eighteen, on matters which the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury covers, are then referred to. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who seems to have reaped some enjoyment from this, and others who claim that this is a full answer, to the fact that the Secretary says on page 2:

> While the resolution calls for a statement as to the daily balance in each bank, it is presumed the information covering these dates—

That is the several dates previously named—> will fully answer the scope of the inquiry, as they are the dates upon which the depositaries reported their balances to the Treasury Department.

Showing, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Treasury in the particular pointed out—and it is the only one to which my attention has yet been called—showing that the Secretary of the Treasury admits at the outset that he has not answered the specific inquiry made by the Senate upon the matters to which I have called attention.

On page 3, after saying what his report will contain, the Secretary of the Treasury in this pamphlet proceeds with an argument. I have no objection to the argument, because if any man can justify the conduct of the Treasury Department in the particulars inquired into I desire it to be done. I have such respect, Mr. President, for the officers of the United States that I hope they will never violate the law. After stating what his report will contain as to the facts called for in the resolution of the Senate, the Secretary says:

> In view of the importance of the subject and the wide discussion which has occurred in regard to certain matters mentioned in the resolution, it seems to me proper to summarize as briefly as possible the operations of the Treasury for the past few months, and to follow this by a statement more in detail of the methods and reasons for some of the steps taken.

Then follows his argument. It appears, therefore, that the Secretary of the Treasury presents to the Senate in manuscript his answer on the facts as called for by the resolution, and presents to the Senate and the country his argument in print prior to the time the Senate orders his entire response to be printed.

So far as I am concerned, I make no point as to whether the Secretary of the Treasury shall answer a resolution in print or in writing, though if it were submitted to me I would follow the precedents of the Senate; but I do object to him presenting his answer in piecemeal to the Senate and giving out to the country a portion of his answer before the Senate orders the full answer to be printed. In other words, he says substantially, I will answer the facts in writing; I will present my argument in print and submit it to the Senate and the country before the Senate sees proper or can print my entire report.

That is the criticism, Mr. President, I make upon the matter, because, as I have said, I care not especially whether the answer itself be in writing or in print.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I had supposed that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] were seriously engaged in making a serious inquiry into a serious business. I think the impression that their remarks this morning must make upon the Senate and the country will be that, for some reason or other, they have been taking part in a comedy.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am quite sure that the fair-minded Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] does not desire an impression entirely erroneous to go forth as a result of his observations just made. The inference to be drawn from what the Senator has said—and fairly drawn, I think—is that the Secretary of the Treasury set forth the facts with reference to this matter in response to a resolution in one paper, which was filed with the Senate and is hereafter to be placed in print, and that a specious argument in defense of his action, which has been the subject of the Senator's complaint, is printed in an entirely separate document for the purpose of having this document circulated in advance of the statement of the facts.

Now, let it be distinctly understood that that inference is not warranted by the facts, nor do I assume that the Senator from Texas intended it should be drawn from his statement. The printed report is the report filed with the President of the Senate, by him handed to the Secretary of the Senate, and laid before the Senate. It is a report to the Senate addressed to the President of the Senate, and is the entire report of the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject, save and except to the extent that it is elaborated and supplemented by a certain line of exhibits referred to from time to time and from page to page in the course of this printed document.

There has been no sharp practice in this. The Secretary of the Treasury is not sending a confidential communication to the Senate. The country is entitled to the information, and it was intended undoubtedly that the information should go to the country. The moment this report is presented here the newspapers of the country are entitled, as a matter of right, to send it forth as public news, public information to the waiting people. The fact that the Secretary of the Treasury put the whole statement in convenient form, leaving only the exhibits to be hereafter printed, seems to be the entire basis of all the criticism offered this morning.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians.

Mr. BURKETT. I move that the message and accompanying bill lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

TEA FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not yet received the letter from the Agricultural Department which I stated the other day I had expected, but I do not propose to delay the bill further. I have read with care the statement the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] prepared, and I am not going to make any objection to the bill.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have here a letter which was received from the Secretary of Agriculture in response to a former call of the Committee on Commerce made on him in the last Congress, in which the Secretary makes no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to the Senator to have that letter printed in the RECORD. As I have stated, I make no further objection to the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD in this connection the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted to insert in the RECORD the letter mentioned, without reading.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1905.

DEAR SIR: By your reference of February 2, S. 5600, to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," was brought to the attention of this Department. A letter to Senator STONE from the Monsanto Chemical Works, of St. Louis, Mo., a concern which proposes to manufacture caffeine from tea waste, sweepings, etc., was also referred.

I approve of the measure, provided the safeguards against the consumption of the articles imported are sufficiently explicit to secure for manufacturing purposes the whole of the imports admitted under the provisions of the proposed act.

Very truly, yours, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

MR. WOODBURY PULSIFER,
Clerk to the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The following letter was subsequently presented by Mr. LODGE and ordered to be printed in the RECORD at this point:

JANUARY 29, 1908.

Hon. H. C. LODGE, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I have examined very carefully the bill which you transmitted with your note yesterday and beg leave to make the following suggestions:

So far as I can see, this bill provides only for the importation of inferior tea, or tea fragments, for the purpose of manufacturing caffeine under supervision. It has been the practice for some time to permit the importation of such tea for the above purpose when properly denatured. One of the denaturants used is asafœtida. The bill would permit the inferior tea and tea fragments to be imported without denaturing, and manufactured under conditions which apparently safeguard the interests of the consumer. It is often difficult to denature inferior food products in such a way that they can not be used for food in order that they may be used for technical purposes, yet it is not impossible, as is shown by the denaturing of alcohol. The principle, it appears to me, is a sound one if it can be applied in such a way that these inferior products are not offered for consumption as foods or drugs in the unmanufactured state. There are other drugs which come in the same class, as, for instance, inferior grades of opium to be used for making morphine and codeine; inferior grades of nux vomica, for making strychnine and brucine; inferior grades of cocoa leaves, for the manufacture of cocaine; inferior, worm-eaten, and shriveled nutmegs, for manufacturing nutmeg oil, etc.

I imagine from the character of the bill that it is not desirable to extend the present bill further than inferior tea and tea sweepings. I am simply calling attention to these other matters, because it seems to me it would be wise to provide at some appropriate time for the importation of materials ordinarily used as food products, for technical purposes, either by requiring their denaturing or under bond, in such way that the rights of the consumer would be preserved. I think the present bill is a step in the right direction.

Sincerely, H. W. WILEY, Chief.

BENTON WATER COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] made a suggestion to the Secretary that he desired to be present when this bill was considered.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, under those circumstances I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Oregon.

MARY C. MAYERS.

The consideration of bill (S. 2227) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read at length.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to that bill, to which I objected on yesterday, I desire to say that it belongs to a class of bills that I think ought to be very carefully considered before they receive the approval of either House of Congress. I am not going to object to it to-day, because I have been appealed to not to do so, but I want to put in the RECORD a brief statement.

A good many years ago, when I chanced to be a Member of the other House of Congress, I introduced a bill on behalf of some citizens of the State of New Hampshire who were fired upon by soldiers, ignorant or vicious, from Fort Constitution, in Portsmouth Harbor. The firing resulted, as I remember now, in the death of one of the persons, a woman, and the maiming of one or more other citizens of the State. It was thought by the family and their friends that the Government was responsible for the injury done to those people. That bill, as I remember it, passed the other House and came to this body, when the former Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Spooner, made a very careful investigation of the matter and, I think, made a written report. At any rate, the bill did not receive the sanction of the Senate. The then Senator from Wisconsin frequently alluded to it in debates on bills similar to this, saying that was a bill that had great merit, but he did not think the Government ought to enter upon the payment of money to citizens who chanced to lose their lives in the service of the Government.

Mr. President, that bill has passed out of sight and it never will be revived. When it was disposed of in that way I hoped it had established a precedent that would be followed by Congress; but since then, as I remember, a good many similar bills have passed the Senate and some of them doubtless have been enacted into law.

Two days ago, Mr. President, I received the following letter from a citizen of the District of Columbia:

JANUARY 27, 1908.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I most earnestly appeal for your kind consideration for a just compensation from the Government for the loss of my husband,

John A. Dugan. He was employed from 1878 to 1896 as a chemist's assistant in the Department of Agriculture. During the early summer of 1896 he was engaged in the line of duty testing soils. It was necessary to do this work under glass and in a place exposed to the direct rays of the sun. The severe heat affected his brain so that we were obliged to send him to Mount Hope Asylum, outside Baltimore, Md. He did not improve, so we sent him to St. Elizabeth's Asylum, District of Columbia, where he remained for a year, his condition unchanged, and died in December, 1897. I had five children to provide for and found it difficult to get along. I lost my home in my effort to meet expenses.

Very respectfully,

MARY A. DUGAN.

Another good woman, under the same date, writes concerning this claim, and she addressed me as a "friend of the District." I am glad to know that there are some people in the District who think that I am a friend to the people of a community that is disfranchised, and, as some people say, dependent upon Congress. She says:

JANUARY 27, 1908.

HON. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senator, and friend of the District.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: I most earnestly appeal to your powerful influence and kind consideration in behalf of this worthy widow, Mary A. Dugan. She has no influence to push this claim. All she asks is a just consideration for the loss she has met with and a compensation such as a soldier's widow would be entitled to or your fair mind would suggest.

Very respectfully, MRS. A. H. DOUGHERTY, 1013 East Capitol Street, City.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, may I inquire if the Senator is reading those letters with reference to Senate bill 2227, for the relief of Mary C. Mayers?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am.

Mr. BURKETT. As I read the report on the Mayers bill, Mayers was killed by the fall of a whaleboat belonging to the U. S. S. Charleston, in Victoria Harbor, Hongkong.

Mr. GALLINGER. He was.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not understand how the letters the Senator has read have reference to this case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been reading these letters simply to show that this is a somewhat similar case, where a man lost his life in the service of the Government—so it is alleged—by undue exposure, and for the purpose of showing that, if these claims continue to be passed by Congress, we shall have a deluge of them before long, and that every man who has been employed by the Government who has sustained an injury or loses his life, whether it possibly be by his own fault or not, will be here demanding that the Government should remunerate him or his widow for the damage that may have been done to him.

Mr. President, I do not think I shall introduce a bill in behalf of this worthy woman who has written me, because I do not think the case could be made out conclusively, inasmuch as it is alleged that this man was injured by undue exposure to the heat of the sun in a place where, very likely, he ought not to have been asked to work; but I do want to sound the alarm, at least, when I say that the passage of this bill—and I recall the fact that we have passed certain other similar bills in prior Congresses—if it becomes a law, will open a channel that will be clogged with similar claims made against the Government for injury, for loss of life, and possibly the loss of property on the part of citizens of the country who may be engaged in the service of the Government.

I have said, Mr. President, to a Senator who is greatly interested in this bill that I will not renew my objection to it today; but I wanted to put the brief statement I have made in the RECORD. With that I will submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, so far as the Committee on Claims is concerned, which is charged with the consideration of such bills as this, it would be very glad if Congress would establish the precedent, if that is the disposition of Congress, that no claim for personal injury shall be allowed. But, Mr. President, these bills are constantly being introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims, and constantly being passed by both Houses. Perhaps I should not use the word "constantly;" but "frequently."

Since I have been chairman of the Committee on Claims I do not think to exceed two or three bills for personal injuries have been reported by that committee. I will ask the Senator from Utah if I am correct in that?

Mr. SMOOT. Only four such bills, I think.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Utah says "four;" I am quite sure not beyond that. We have exercised extreme care in inquiring into the facts and circumstances of every case. We require more than an ordinarily clear showing to be made in cases of that character, for we are well aware that it is easier to establish a claim by ex-parte testimony than it would be were the witnesses before a court and subject to cross-examination. But, Mr. President, so long as Congress continues to recognize any of these claims, just so long will bills to pay them be introduced and referred to the committee, and just so long will the committee be compelled to report such of them as seem to the committee to be perfectly clear in the establishment of the claim.

This bill, for instance, is one as to which the facts are with remarkable clearness established and where they clearly show that the Government is liable, if it ever is to be held liable, for negligence. It is a case where the injury occurred on board of a little launch that was lying alongside of the cruiser Charleston at the gangway. Through the negligence of one of the crew of the Charleston the ship's boat above was loosened, fell down upon the party who was in this launch, and killed him. The Government recognized its responsibility in the case of the Chinamen who were on board by paying them. The Government also appointed a board to survey the launch and ascertain the damages it had sustained. The survey reported some $500 damage, which was paid by the Government, thus recognizing its liability and responsibility for the injury.

Under those circumstances, it clearly appearing that the accident was entirely due to the negligence of the crew, it seemed to us that if we should ever report any bill for personal injury, this was one that should be reported.

Now, I would be very glad if we could in some way secure a test vote on the proposition whether it is to be the policy of Congress to allow any claim for personal injuries. If the Senate shall say that such is not to be the policy, very well; the committee will know what to do with the bills. But until the Senate shall specifically state or by its action indicate that it will not allow these bills the committee has but one thing to do, and that is to inquire into them carefully and report them, if they seem to be meritorious.

The Senator from New Hampshire need not fear that there is going to be a flood of these bills. There may be a flood of them up to the committee, but they will find that there is a dam there which will restrain the flood from that point.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think this class of bills ought not to receive the favorable consideration of the Senate, because it would open the door to an endless demand upon the Government and to a great many cases which probably are not deserving. But the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] made one point in regard to this particular case which seemed to me conclusive, although I was about to object and ask to have the bill sent over under Rule IX.

Mr. Mayers was not in the employ of the Government. He went on board the ship to collect payment for a bill, and he was killed, owing to the negligence of sailors of the United States. That is admitted by the court of inquiry. The Government paid the three Chinamen who were injured at that time, and it paid for the launch in which Mr. Mayers was, because the injury was done by the fall of the ship's boat from the davits into the launch below. Therefore it paid everybody who was injured, either pecuniarily or physically, by the accident except the family of this unfortunate man who was killed. I think under those circumstances there is no ground for excluding this widow.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, some one called my attention to this matter, and I objected to the bill a few days ago. I think the bill is entirely outside of the precedents that the Congress ever has established heretofore. I have not had time to go through all of them, but I have gone through a good many of them, and so far as I have found the precedent we have made—and it is limited, perhaps, to half a dozen cases—has been to pay for injuries to Government employees.

Mr. FULTON. I did not understand the Senator. Will he kindly repeat his statement?

Mr. BURKETT. I said that so far as concerns any precedents I could find, they were confined to payments for damages incurred on account of the injury or death of Government employees.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. Does he think there is a greater obligation on the Government to pay an employee who has suffered through the negligence of some other agent of the Government than there is to pay a perfect stranger who has suffered through the negligence of the Government? For instance, in this case, the man went on board the vessel by invitation, that is, impliedly by invitation, because the parties whom he was representing had sold the cruiser some coal, and he went on board to collect for it. As he was leaving the ship and had gotten down on a launch, through the negligence of servants of the United States he was killed. Does the Senator think there would have been a greater obligation to pay his widow had he been an employee of the Government? If so, I should be glad to have the Senator explain wherein a different equity would arise in the one case than in the other.

Mr. BURKETT. I do think there is a difference and that there is a different obligation of the Government to pay an employee of the Government than there is an outsider who is injured in a place where he has gone himself for a business transaction.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me one other question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if the equity would not in fact be stronger in favor of the stranger, in view of the fact that the employee assumes a certain amount of risk when he enters the employment, whereas the stranger assumes nothing, going there by invitation.

Mr. BURKETT. I expected to cover that point. I was about to say that I do think there is a different obligation morally on the part of the Government—and of course they are all moral obligations, and when we pass these bills we recognize them as such—to its employees than there is to the stranger who goes at arm's length on his own invitation to do business with an officer of the Government.

The report shows that this man was a coal dealer in Hongkong; that he went aboard the vessel to transact business with officers of the vessel; that while he was there this unfortunate occurrence took place, and the boat falling struck him. He was not there by direction of Government officers. So far as I can find from the report he was not there by invitation of a Government officer. He had gone there to transact business with Government officers, and assumed whatever liability attached from going there.

Mr. FULTON. I will ask the Senator if it is not a well-established principle in the law that where you purchase of another or incur indebtedness and fix a place where he shall come for pay and he goes there, he goes there on your invitation. Therefore, the cruiser having purchased coal, and that being a proper place for the agent to go to get the pay for the coal, he went there by invitation.

Mr. BURKETT. It might have been that the proper place to get the pay was in his office. He could have stayed there and there received his pay. There is nothing in the report to show any invitation, either direct or implied.

Mr. President, I have glanced through these precedents. Every one is where, under very distressing circumstances, the hearts of the members of the Committee on Claims and of the Senate and House have been won over by exceptional equity. There have been extremely appealing circumstances in the cases where the Government has paid damages, even to the families of its own employees, who were under the direction of its officers.

I have pending before the committee a case where, by the direction of the superior officer, a young employee went into a certain dangerous place and was killed. His family are asking the Government to recompense them. He was acting under the direction of the Government, through its officers. I submit that that is an entirely different case and that there is an entirely different equity in that case than in the case where a man in business goes to a place to transact business and by some unfortunate circumstance is injured.

Yesterday the Senate passed over from Rule VIII to Rule IX two claims that came up under this sort of reasoning: Some men out West somewhere started some cattle to market. By carelessness or negligence, or whatever we may call it, an officer of the Government improperly delayed the cattle, as the owner of the cattle contends, in getting to market. The market went down. As a result the owner lost some money, and he asks the Government to recompense him. A man in the transaction of business should recognize the law and the requirements and the conditions that are imposed by the Government. If the cattle had gone up the Government would have had just as good a claim to have the owner recompense it for what the Government's delay had made him in the increased price.

Here is a case that is entirely different from any precedent, so far as I can find, and I took occasion to investigate it some time a year ago when this matter was before the Committee on Claims and I was a member of that committee. I have not been able to find a precedent similar to this case, where the Congress has paid damages for the accidental death of any person who was standing at arm's length doing business with the Government. I submit it is a different proposition; and if we open the doors to this class of cases, we will simply open it to another class in addition to those for which there are precedents. In my opinion we ought to hold a man doing business with the Government up to the same responsibility, and attach to the Government no other liability than if the Government were a private individual.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator has observed, I suppose, from the report that in this case the Government paid the Chinamen for the injuries they suffered?

Mr. BURKETT. They were employees of the Government.

Mr. FULTON. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. They got $10 apiece.

Mr. FULTON. All right. If the Senator from Nebraska prefers to be understood as defending the payment for the injuries suffered by the Chinamen, even though they were employees of the Government, and the payment on account of the boat that was lying alongside and was injured, and yet is willing to stand here and deny any compensation to the widow of this man, he is entitled to that position.

Mr. BURKETT. When we get to an argument of that sort, I submit it should not be entitled to any recognition here. It is not a question of payment to this widow. It is a question here as to what sort of a precedent we are going to establish and whether we are acting within the proprieties in this case, or whether we are going to do that which will bring us trouble and endless expense hereafter. The Chinamen the Senator refers to were employees of the Government. They were there in that particular employ by the direction of an officer of the Government, and to adjust their claims and to relieve the Government of any further liability they did adjust those claims for a very small amount. I think some Senator said $10 apiece.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Claims to state that this party was lawfully on board the ship.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, sir; he had gone there to collect a coal bill.

Mr. PERKINS. He was lawfully there. If it had been a merchant vessel and if he had gone into a court of equity, is there any question that the heirs of the deceased person would be entitled to damages? There is no question of it. I can cite case after case in my own experience where people lawfully on board a vessel have been injured by the employees of the vessel and the company or the owners of the ship were held liable for damages.

Now, it seems to me in all fairness and equity the Government should be equally as generous and equally as liberal as a private corporation or individual can be compelled to be if the party injured can have a hearing in a court of justice.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not going into the question as to how liberal the Government can afford to be. It can be as liberal as Congress thinks it ought to be. We have power to pass this bill. There are a great many widows and orphans whom the Government could help. There are a great many cases where its charity could be very well meted out, and I suspect that most of us know a great many instances where we could, with great propriety, upon arguments which would appeal to the Senate, appropriate money here and there. I rose only to answer the statement of the chairman of the committee and to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are no precedents for this case, and if we pass this bill we will make a precedent for which we will have a thousand similar bills hereafter.

This man was the agent of another person. He went on board the ship under the direction of the other person. He was injured in his employ, doing his work, at a place where he was sent. If there is any moral or other obligation to recompense this widow for her loss, it must be on the part of the man in whose employ he was and who sent him to this place where he was killed.

Mr. President, I submit there is no precedent for this case. There is not any more equity in it than there is in hundreds of other cases. If we establish this precedent, then the Committee on Claims ought to take up and recommend every other bill of this character. I am not saying it is improper to do so. I sympathize with the widow who lost her protector and support. We all do. There is no question about that. The question comes back, What is the proper thing for the Congress to do? We should not let ourselves be carried away by sympathy, but we should determine what is the proper thing to do. If this case is right, then let the committee recommend a hundred other cases which are before it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the rule which the committee undertook to follow in this case and in other classes of cases is in some way to measure the responsibility which would exist if the Government were an individual. There can be no question under the law that if this party went upon board ship by invitation, either expressed or implied, the Government, were it an individual, would be liable. It is not a question of negligence. If a party is conducting a place of business where by invitation, either express or implied, another party is asked to go to transact business and he receives an injury while there which arises out of the carelessness of the party who has invited him there, the law obligates the latter party to pay.

The party in this case was upon board ship by reason of the express invitation of the Government to go there and transact the business which he was called there to do. It is immaterial that he was sent there by another party. The fact is he went by the invitation of the Government to perform the functions which he was designated as an agent to do at that particular place, and it was the Government's duty to protect him while he was there in that position. It is not a question of protecting the widow by reason of charity, but simply of giving her what she would be entitled to have if she was proceeding against an individual by reason of the legal liability which exists.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I have always made it a rule that I would vote for the payment of no claim against the Government of the United States that I would not be perfectly willing to pay if the claim were against myself. The Committee on Claims has been very careful indeed in scrutinizing every bill that has come before it, and in this particular case the facts, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, were taken under consideration, and the committee decided that it was a worthy case and should be recognized and paid by the Government.

I should like an expression as to the attitude of the Senate in relation to these personal-injury cases. I hope that either the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Nebraska will object to the bill and let us have a vote upon a motion to proceed to its consideration, and thus secure an expression of the Senate upon this class of cases, for, as a member of the committee, I want to say there are a great many such claims to be passed upon. If it is understood that it is to be the policy of the Senate to pay no personal-injury claims, then, as a member of that committee, I should like to know, and I shall be very willing to take that position. But I do feel that if we are going to pay any kind of personal-injury claims, the one which is now before the Senate should be paid, because I believe it is a just one and has been carefully considered by the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise more particularly to correct the statement I made when I said that this man was in the employ of the Government. I thought he was in the employ of the Government on a Government vessel. It appears he was not. The accident occurred to him when he was visiting the ship on business.

Attention has been called to the fact that some Chinamen who were injured were compensated. They were, to the extent of $10 a piece, and I presume that was all they were entitled to.

In looking at the report I find that in addition to Mr. Mayers four men who were not Chinamen were injured:

George Wolf (ordinary seaman) received a scalp wound, Frank Byrne (apprentice, second class) a scalp wound, and John Belevsen (seaman) suffered from shock.

James Hawkins (apprentice, second class) sprained his ankle.

Those four men do not seem to have been settled with, and I presume we will have four claims from these men, if they are alive, or from their representatives, if we pass the pending bill. I am not going to vote for the bill, but I shall not ask that it go over or make any factious opposition to it. If the debate is closed, I wish to offer some amendments to the bill, inasmuch as I propose to move to strike out the preamble, which I think ought not to remain in the bill. On page 1, line 4 of the bill, before the words "Mary C. Mayers," I move to strike out "the said," and in the same line, after the words "widow of," I move to strike out "the said."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 2, line 1, after the name "Joseph L. Mayers," I move to insert:

Who lost his life as the result of injuries received on May 6, 1899, by the fall of the first whaleboat belonging to the U. S. S. Charleston, then lying in Victoria Harbor, Hongkong, China.

Those are the words of the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall move to strike out the preamble at the proper time, because it states that the accident occurred by the negligence of some of the ship's crew, while the late Secretary of the Navy, John D. Long, says it was not due to the negligence of the officers or the ship's crew, but by the error of a young fellow who happened to have something to do with the machinery.

Mr. FULTON. I think the preamble should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. FULTON. I did not personally report the bill, as I recall.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BURKETT. I can not sit here and let a bill of this kind pass without a protest. I want a vote upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

LEASING OF LAND BY INDIAN ALLOTTEES.

The bill (S. 1773) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GAMBLE. The senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] indicated a desire to be heard on the bill if it came up for consideration. I do not see him in the Chamber at the moment, and I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

LAND FOR CALIFORNIA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 517) authorizing the purchase of lands for California Indians, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the bill was read yesterday, and I asked that it go over. I have no disposition to antagonize it. I hope it will be put on its passage without being read at this time, having been read yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to expend not to exceed $50,000 to purchase for the use of the Indians in California now residing on reservations which do not contain land suitable for cultivation and for Indians who are not now upon reservations in that State suitable tracts or parcels of land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANS ON FORT BELKNAP INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 3084) providing for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, and animals for the Indians on Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, to enable said Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CARTER. The bill was read yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the bill was read yesterday, and I made some objection to it. I have not changed my mind about the legislation. I think it is not only extraordinary, but somewhat vicious; but as it deals with the Indians of Montana, about whom the Senator from Montana knows a great deal more than I do, I do not propose to urge any further objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The amendments were, in line 3, after the word "implements," to strike out "and;" in line 4, after the word "animals," to insert "and other equipment;" in line 5, after the word "Montana," to insert "and for the compensation of additional employees at the Fort Belknap Agency in said State," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, animals, and other equipment for the Indians on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and for the compensation of additional employees at the Fort Belknap Agency in said State, to enable said Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under such conditions as said Secretary may prescribe for the repayment by said Indians to the United States of the sum so expended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORPS OF ARMY DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4432) to reorganize the corps of dental surgeons attached to the Medical Department of the Army. The bill was read yesterday just at the close of the morning hour.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent that 300 additional copies of the bill and the report be printed; the supply is exhausted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

ALFRED BURGESS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 1162) to correct the naval record of Alfred Burgess.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to correct the record of Alfred Burgess, late a seaman on board the U. S. S. Sonoma and Juniata, and to remove any charge of desertion now standing against his record and to issue to him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER H. BRODIE.

Mr. PLATT. I should like also to call up the bill (S. 1163) to correct the naval record of Peter H. Brodie, alias Patrick Torbett.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to this bill, but after it is considered I shall ask for the regular order.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to correct the naval record of Peter H. Brodie, alias Patrick Torbett, late a sailor in the United States Navy, serving on the United States battle ship Ohio, the United States ship Maria Denning, and the Undine, and to issue to him a discharge from the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next business on the Calendar will be announced.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 23d instant, authorizing and directing the Finance Committee to make inquiry and report as to the distribution of moneys of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury was announced as next in order.

Mr. STONE. I ask that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

EXTENSION OF BOUNTY-LAND LAWS.

The bill (S. 1407) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men, and the officers and men of the boat companies of the Florida Seminole Indian war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

WILLIAM C. O'NEAL.

The bill (S. 1405) granting an increase of pension to W. C. O'Neal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. O'Neal, late of Captain Hardee's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "and," to strike out "St. George Rogers's regiment of cavalry" and insert "First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war;" and in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hester Kite, widow of Benjamin Kite, late of Captain Stewart's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Lourcey, late of Captain Brady's company, First Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ULYSSES G. WINN.

The bill (S. 604) to reimburse Ulysses G. Winn for money erroneously paid into the Treasury of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $132.80 to reimburse Ulysses G. Winn for the amount, erroneously deposited by him while United States commissioner at Center and Stonewall, in the southern district of the Indian Territory, in the years 1900 and 1901, and which was paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. A. NOON.

The bill (S. 533) for the relief of A. A. Noon was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. There does not appear to be a report in that case. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to state that I called for the report, but the report has not been printed. I have, however, the report which was made at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BURKETT. Let the bill go over for the present until I can see the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

GEORGE W. YOUNG.

The bill (S. 534) to reimburse George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, Utah, for loss of postage stamps was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate for the reimbursement of George W. Young, postmaster at Wanship, in the State of Utah, for postage stamps stolen from a safe without fault on his part, $163.87.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSAY OFFICE AT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

LOCATION OF MINERAL CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 129) to validate the location of mineral claims heretofore made by United States deputy mineral surveyors during their incumbency in office was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, in line 7, page 1, after the word "office," to insert "as deputy mineral surveyors and such locations shall not be deemed to be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title to mining claims heretofore located by persons holding commissions as United States deputy mineral surveyors shall not be held invalid by reason of the fact that such locations were made by deputy mineral surveyors during their incumbency in office as deputy mineral surveyors and such locations shall not be deemed to be in violation of section 452 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to call attention to the amendment. The Senator who reported the bill is not here. The bill reads, "such locations were made by deputy mineral surveyors during their incumbency in office," and it is proposed to insert "as deputy mineral surveyors." If they were deputy mineral surveyors I do not know why we want to put an amendment in the bill repeating the fact that they were deputy mineral surveyors. Let the bill go over until the Senator who reported it is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

The bill (S. 627) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909 was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

PORT HUDSON FORLORN HOPE STORMING PARTY.

A bill (S. 629) to grant medals to survivors and heirs of volunteers of the Port Hudson forlorn hope storming party, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 10, page 1, before the word "volunteers," I move to insert the word "surviving;" after the word "party," in the same line, I move to strike out the comma and insert a period; and to strike out the word "or," in the same line, and let the word "in" begin with a capital. Let the Secretary kindly read the bill as it will stand if amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, before the word "volunteers," insert the word "surviving;" in the same line, after the word "party," strike out the comma and insert a period; strike out the word "or" and begin the word "in" that follows with a capital I, so that if amended the bill would read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to procure a suitable bronze medal commemorating the organization of the volunteer storming party against the works at Port Hudson, La., organized, pursuant to General Order No. 49, by command of Major-General Banks, commanding the Department of the Gulf, June 15, 1863, and present one of said medals to each of the surviving volunteers of said storming party. In case of the decease of the volunteer said medal shall be given to his widow or oldest heir: Provided, That such medal shall bear an inscription in suitable language to be designated by the Secretary of War, giving the name of the volunteer, his company and regiment, and stating in substance that the person to whom this medal was awarded volunteered for said storming party: Provided further, That for the purposes of this act the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, a few moments ago I was out of the Chamber in answer to the call of a gentleman who had some business with me, when I understand that the bill (S. 627) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909 was put under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT]. I hope the Senator will withdraw his request. If he is opposed to the bill, I have no objection, of course, to his urging any objection he may have to it, but I should like to get it up in its regular order instead of having it put under Rule IX. I am perfectly willing to have the bill called up when he is present; I shall not call it up in his absence, but I do not care to have the bill put under Rule IX.

Mr. BURKETT. I am very much opposed to the bill. I did not know that I had done anything improper or more than the Senator might expect I would do in having the bill placed under Rule IX. I had supposed that when a bill went to the Calendar under Rule IX it then took a motion to take it up for consideration, and therefore it could not be taken up properly when I would not have a chance to know something of it. If it simply goes over under Rule VIII, as I understand——

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DELAY IN CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the Senate may continue the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. If the matter of Rule IX has been settled between the two Senators, I wish to call attention to the fact that from Order of Business 144, Senate bill 4024, we have neither bills nor reports on our files, and therefore it is impossible to deal with them. There is no report here for Calendar No. 133, Senate bill 533, and the bill was reported on the 27th of January. Those reports and bills ought to have been here this morning in time to go on our files. I mention it in order to call the attention of the Printing Office to it. We can not undertake to do business here unless we can get ordinary bills and reports of this kind, which are mostly very brief, in the morning in time to deal with them. As it is, we are cut off from finishing the Calendar, because we have no reports or bills.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is nothing further to be done in legislative session, I will move an executive session.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senator will withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withhold it if there is anything to be done.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask——

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I was in the midst of a statement when I was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour, and I wish to finish it.

As I said, I asked to have the bill go to the Calendar, under Rule IX, because I thought then when it was taken up I would be here and would get a chance to oppose it. I have no objection to the bill being taken up at any time, provided we can debate it and have a vote on it. I did not want to have anything improperly done because the Senator from Washington was absent. If I could not have had the bill passed to Rule IX, had the Senator from Washington been here, then I want to withdraw any request I made and put it right back to where it was. I do not want to take any advantage of his absence. If by the Senator's objection he could have prevented its going to Rule IX, then I want to withdraw my request and put it back under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURKETT. My request now is that the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the order placing the bill upon the Calendar under Rule IX is rescinded at the request of the Senator from Nebraska and the bill will be placed on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BURKETT. I now renew my request that it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. PILES. I oppose that request and ask that the bill remain on the Calendar under Rule VIII. It is important that the bill shall be disposed of one way or the other at an early date. The people of my section of the country have expended very large sums of money in an effort to give an exposition, which will take place in June, 1909. In order to prepare for the exposition it is necessary that action shall be taken on the bill at an early date. I will ask for a vote on the proposition if necessary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I take it for granted if the bill goes back, as the Senator from Nebraska has so kindly said he would consent, to the Calendar, and the Senator from Washington should give assurance that the bill will not be called and acted upon without the Senator from Nebraska being present, that is only fair.

Mr. PILES. I shall certainly call it up publicly and ask that it be set down for discussion.

Mr. BURKETT. This matter——

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how we can make an arrangement of that sort. There may be other Senators who wish to discuss the bill. As long as it is on the Calendar under Rule VIII it is likely to go through, or may go through, as unobjected business. I personally have no objection to the bill, but there may be other Senators who do object to it. I think it ought to be placed either under Rule IX or Rule VIII. I do not think you can put any qualification upon it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is nothing to prevent the Senator from Washington making the request that he did. It is that the bill should go to the Calendar as it was before. The Senator from Nebraska has withdrawn his objection to that, and I made the suggestion, in view of that very courteous action on the part of the Senator from Nebraska, that the Senator from Washington of course would give the Senator from Nebraska assurance in open Senate that the bill would not be taken up in the absence of the Senator from Nebraska, which is fair on both sides.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will kindly restate his request.

Mr. BURKETT. My request is now that the bill shall go to the Calendar under Rule IX. As I understand it, the Senator from Washington objects. It may require a vote to send it to Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. According to the usual practice, the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Washington can move to take up the bill from the Calendar under Rule IX for consideration.

Mr. BURKETT. I have requested that the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. PILES. Do I understand the Chair to state that the bill can be put under Rule IX on the request of one Senator without a vote?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been the long established practice to do so upon the request of one Senator. The Senator from Washington can move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, which brings it before the Senate if the motion prevails, notwithstanding the request made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PILES. Several Senators want to make some remarks on the bill, and there may be some who desire to make objections to it. I will take it up at a stated time and let them know. For that reason I do not like to move its consideration at the present time, but I will move, if it is proper for me to do so, that the bill be reinstated on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senator from Washington is really in the least limited by its going to the Calendar under Rule IX. He can make a motion to take it up any day after 1 o'clock.

Mr. PILES. Then I will give notice now that I shall submit some remarks next Monday on the bill and ask for its consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I was on my feet to make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 30, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 29, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

Good Lord, deliver us, we beseech Thee, from the jingo, the demagogue, the bigot, and all other undesirable citizens, and give us instead the patriot, the statesman, the broad-minded, generous-hearted, manly man, that Thy Kingdom may come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven, for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IMMEDIATE-TRANSPORTATION PRIVILEGES, KNIGHTS KEY, FLA.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 14011) amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECOND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 300.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the statement read in lieu of the report?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 300 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments to the House bill and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the word "or," in line 5 of the House bill, and insert the words "or abandoned" after the word "forfeited," in the same line.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered.

STATEMENT.

The effect of the agreement reached by the conferees is to leave the House bill in the form in which it passed the House with the exception of the addition of the word "abandoned," in line 5, so as to make the beneficiaries of the measure those who had lost, forfeited, or abandoned their former entry.

The change in no wise affects the object or intent of the bill as it passed the House, but is intended to make the intent clearer.

FRANK W. MONDELL,
A. J. GRONNA,
JOHN W. GAINES,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the consideration of Senate bill 485, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 485) to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Lipscomb, Hemphill, Wheeler, Collingsworth, Childress, Cottle, King, Dickens, Motley, Hall, Donley, Gray, Roberts, Ochiltree, Hansford, Hutchinson, Carson, Armstrong, Briscoe, Floyd, Crosby, Lubbock, Hale, Swisher, Randall, Potter, Moore, Sherman, Hockley, Cochran, Bailey, Parmer, Dallam, Hartley, Oldham, Deaf Smith, Castro, and Lamb shall constitute a division of the northern judicial district of Texas.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts of said division shall maintain an office, in charge of themselves or a deputy, at the said city of Amarillo, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said division.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill. Has the original bill been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The original bill is in the Judiciary Committee, and they have reported a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the bill which has been read, and consider the Senate bill in the House at this time. Is that the request of the gentleman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, this bill simply creates a new division in one of the judicial districts of Texas?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is all.

Mr. PAYNE. And has no other object?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None whatever.

Mr. PAYNE. And it has been to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee has recommended a similar or identical bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. With an amendment recommended by the Attorney-General, and also an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and all agreed to by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. And these amendments will be offered to the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill in any way affects the eastern judicial district of Texas?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not. It only provides for a new division of the northern district.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. And it does not affect the counties of Montague, Crook, or Denton?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not change that part of the State at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that this Senate bill should be amended, in accordance with his wish, as suggested by the Attorney-General, to strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 in section 2 and insert in lieu thereof "beginning on the third Monday in April and on the fourth Monday in September of each year," so that the act will fix the time without leaving that to the judge of the court.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct. That is the time recommended by the judge.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and insert in lieu thereof "beginning on the third Monday of April and on the fourth Monday of September of each year."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is another amendment which I wish to have adopted. In line 22, after the word "hereof," add the words:

And that all persons who have committed offenses against the United States in any of the counties mentioned in this bill prior to the passage of this act shall be prosecuted and tried as though this act had not been passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, after the word "hereof," insert: "And that all persons who have committed offenses against the United States in any of the counties mentioned in this bill prior to the passage of this act shall be prosecuted and tried as though this act had not been passed."

Mr. MANN. I think that amendment is in the Senate bill, except the words "prior to the passage of this act." I call the gentleman's attention to that fact.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will not push that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Take the Senate bill that was originally sent up, and it will show what the provision is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I withdraw the amendment and offer another, to include simply those words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment and offers another, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, after "bill," insert:
"Prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents shall have authority to order such printing and binding done as they may deem to be necessary, connected with the business of said committee during this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDORSEMENT OF PRIVATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that under the rule a Member introducing a private bill should make an indorsement as to what committee it should be referred to. Many Members introduce private bills, especially pension bills, without making the indorsement, and it is not practicable for the clerks in the Journal Clerk's office to tell whether the bill should go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions or to the Committee on Pensions, and much confusion results from the failure of the Members to comply with the rule. The Chair desires to call attention of Members to this fact.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14766, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the committee arose the bill was being read under the five-minute rule. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Elimination of grade crossings: Toward carrying out the provisions of the acts of Congress providing for the elimination of grade crossings and the construction of a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, approved February 12, 1901, and February 28, 1903, for purchase or condemnation of the land necessary for the plaza and new streets, and for reconstructing, grading, and paving, together with the necessary incidental work in connection therewith, the streets, avenues, and ways changed in line or grade or newly created under the provisions of said acts, including the employment on the approval of this act of special assistant counsel, at a rate not to exceed $3,000 per annum, and one clerk, at a rate not to exceed $1,000 per annum, in connection with the settlement of claims for damages incident to changes of grade, this sum to be expended under the provisions of said acts, and to continue available until expended, $150,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, after line 19, insert "Washington Asylum." That any unexpended balance in the appropriation for pupil nurses at Washington Asylum Hospital for the fiscal year 1908 is hereby made available for payment of any nurses that, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, may be necessary in the work of the hospital.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In line 18 you make this available until expended. Does the gentleman think that is as good phraseology as you adopted for an amendment of the same character yesterday? You make that run over into an extra fiscal year. This makes the appropriation available until expended, and therefore any little balance unused out of the appropriation will be carried on the books of the Treasury for an indefinite number of years until released. The question has been brought up repeatedly. I do not propose to offer an amendment if the gentleman thinks this is better.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state the reason for phrasing the appropriation in this way. This appropriation is for a specific purpose, and before that purpose is fully accomplished there will have to be a number of additional appropriations to carry it out. Now, the work that is in progress for which this money is to be expended will run over into the next fiscal year. The appropriation is made available until expended for that reason. It is not at all analogous to the case that occurred yesterday, referred to by the gentleman from Iowa. This removal of the grade crossings is a project that Congress authorized several years ago, and until this current year there was a balance or a surplus in the appropriation of a certain amount that is made every year, but the Commissioners were not able to do the work as rapidly as they have been doing it this fiscal year. The purpose is to eliminate the grade crossings as quickly as possible, and in order to do that they need this in order to enable them to continue the work. There is no danger of any unexpended balance; they are sure to use it all up, and they will require a great deal more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If they are to require more, I have no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. A great deal of the delay has been caused by litigation in condemnation proceedings.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

UNDER THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army on account of the Army of Cuban Pacification during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, in the purchase of equipment, stores, and supplies, the engagement of services personal and not personal, and all other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army, by telegraph or otherwise, $10,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Minnesota. Will the gentleman inform me what has been the total cost incurred by the United States for the pacification of Cuba?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can give the gentleman the exact figures. I made that inquiry last week of the Secretary of War and asked him to give a detailed statement, which he has done. The aggregate is $4,453,384.32.

I will send the letter of the Secretary of War to the desk that it may be read and go in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 22, 1908.

DEAR SIR: In response to the request contained in your telegram of 17th instant, I beg to inform you that the amount expended to January 1, 1908, on account of the present intervention in Cuba is $4,453,384.32, as follows:

Quartermaster's Department	$3,586,674.52
Paymaster's Department	356,709.14
Commissary Department	257,566.16
Medical Department	110,100.30
Ordnance Department	11,815.57
Engineer Corps	24,950.77
Signal Corps	99,308.49
Military Information Division	6,259.37
General Staff Corps	4,453,384.32

No part of the above sum has been reimbursed to the United States.

The Commissary-General's report includes expenditures made to and including January 1, 1908, while in the report of the Paymaster-General the figures for November and December are only estimated, as the analysis of disbursing accounts of paymasters in Cuba for that period has not been completed.

Very respectfully,
WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the Government of the United States has taken any steps, or is now taking any steps, to be reimbursed for any part of the sum expended for the pacification of Cuba?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Alabama that at the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations reported a provision in one of the appropriation bills as follows:

The President is hereby authorized to receive from the treasurer of the Cuban Republic and pay to the Treasury of the United States, from time to time, such sums to reimburse the United States for the expenditures of the United States Treasury made necessary by the present intervention as he may consider the Cuban treasury able to pay without serious embarrassment.

That was enacted at the last session of Congress, but I will say that under it there has been no money paid back to the Government of the United States or the Treasury of the United States has not been reimbursed to any extent whatever on account of the expenditures made in the pacification of Cuba.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, will the gentleman tell us whether any of the surplus revenues derived by the Government of Cuba from its various sources is being used or appropriated toward the reimbursement of the United States for the expense it has incurred in the pacification?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that so far as I know there have been no steps taken by the provisional governor to reimburse out of the treasury of Cuba the Treasury of the United States on account of any expenditures made. The report of the provisional governor shows that the balance in the treasury of Cuba, October 31, 1907—that is, the Cuban treasury—was $15,254,330.56; but I will state further that, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have made inquiry of the War Department as to what steps have been taken; and if none were taken, why, to reimburse the Government, in view of this showing as to the condition of the Cuban treasury.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I take it the gentleman can not give the House any information as to what has been done or what is being done to get this money back from the Cuban government.

Mr. TAWNEY. So far as I know no steps have been taken—nothing has been done.

Mr. CLAYTON. Something over $4,000,000 has been expended?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. And upon an average how long since that money has been paid out?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been paid out in the last eighteen months—a little less than eighteen months.

Mr. CLAYTON. So far as the gentleman knows, no steps have been taken to get that money back, although there are $15,000,000 in the treasury of Cuba.

Mr. TAWNEY. So far as I know, no steps have been taken to reimburse the Treasury of the United States on account of the money that has been expended on account of the Cuban pacification.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will state that information has reached the Committee on Military Affairs which enables me to state that the bulk of that expenditure was in the early days of the occupation of the island of Cuba. It was for the transportation of the Army and for the supplies immediately required. So, it is easy to say this debt has been due on an average for more than a year.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any very extensive remarks, but I desire to call the attention of the House and the country——

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the gentleman proceeds, let me read another paragraph from the report of the provisional governor. The fact that there are $15,000,000 in the treasury of Cuba does not necessarily show that that amount is what we call free cash.

This amount is not available or "free cash." There are included in said funds unexpended balances of permanent appropriations by the Cuban Congress for public works, $5,489,516.42, and unexpended balances of permanent appropriation for public improvements made by the provisional administration amounting to $2,153,909.87. These two foregoing sums can not be charged in full against the cash balances in the treasury, for the unexpended portion of appropriations for works now in progress are, either in whole or in part, in the hands of disbursing officers and deposited to their credit in the Banco Nacional or Royal Bank of Canada, and do not appear on the cash account of the treasury. The total amount on deposit in the Banco Nacional to the order of the disbursing officers is $3,476,955.96, and in the Royal Bank of Canada $72,234.54, making a total of $3,549,190.50.

Mr. CLAYTON. From what document is that statement made?

Mr. TAWNEY. From the annual report of Charles E. Magoon, provisional governor of Cuba, to the Secretary of War, January 14, 1908.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, briefly I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], who has charge of the appropriation bills and understands our financial condition perhaps better than any other Member in this House, a few days ago warned the Congress against the probable deficit; and here we have the spectacle of this Administration, with the party in control of which the gentleman is one of the chief advisers, spending upward of $4,000,000 in the island of Cuba for its pacification, and, so far as we know or are advised, it has taken no steps, and does not contemplate taking any early steps, to secure the return of that money. I would like to know from him and from his associates when, how, and what efforts the Government will take to have this money collected from the Government of Cuba?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it seems that we have no arrangement by law for the Government of the United States to be reimbursed. If so, why has not that law been executed?

Mr. TAWNEY. Had the gentleman from Tennessee been in his seat a moment ago when I read the law, he would know that we have a law authorizing the reimbursement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then we are in a worse fix than ever. We have a law without executing it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to correct the gentleman's other statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right. Here we have a law that is a dead letter, that has been put upon the statute books a few years—in the last Congress, I am told—and here we have hundreds and thousands of the people's money that are spent simply policing Cuba, to make the Cuban people behave themselves.

Now, taxation is a burden; maintaining the Army is a burden. These Cubans should be made to know beforehand that if they have a row, if they break the peace, if they rebel against the Government—in other words, if they call upon the Government of the United States to make them behave themselves—they have to pay for it. They should be made to know that if they dance they have to pay the fiddler. As it is, Mr. Chairman, Uncle Sam is paying the fiddler and they are dancing. It seems to me that if they were made to know beforehand that they have to pay the bill they would be much slower than they have been to break the law as they have and breach the peace and force our Government to go down there and make them behave themselves. As it is, we proceeded off down there with our men-of-war, with our detachment of soldiers, and took charge of them and made them behave themselves, and when everybody was sitting in his seat, as we were made to do at school, and everybody was in his seat behaving himself, we picked up our men and came back without impressing it upon them at any time that this burden was imposed by their own misconduct and the law. It seems to me we have been taught a lesson by what the gentleman from Alabama has brought to our attention and from what the distinguished chairman himself admits—that this law should be enforced and vigorously enforced, instead of letting it remain a dead letter.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee when I visited Santiago last November I made inquiry if the people understood that the expenses of our pacification was to be borne by them, and I was informed that all the better class of the Cuban people understood it. The mass of the people, perhaps, do not, but the better class of the people so understood that the cost of the intervention must be paid by them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, that goes exactly back to the point I wanted to impress and, seriously, without any desire to be partisan, that we should make the people down there, not simply the upper class, which perhaps the gentleman only met, but impress the great mass of them with the fact that they, and they alone, have to pay for this war burden on account of their raising trouble down there, provoking the Government of the United States to come down there and make them behave themselves. A law that is a bad law enforced repeals itself, it has been well said. Now, gentlemen, but here we have a good law that is not enforced, and the gentleman admits here is a great body of the taxpayers of Cuba who, even at this late day, do not know that when they misbehaved themselves and brought about a rebellious condition of society there they alone must ultimately bear the burden. What I have said previous to the gentleman's statement is more than accentuated by the last admission the gentleman has made.

The Clerk read as follows:

For barracks and quarters for troops, including all objects mentioned under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, $209,036.69.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get a little information. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, if we have not a law passed under his distinguished leadership prohibiting deficiencies in all appropriations except for regular support of the Army or Navy or carrying on the Government in any line that must be carried on whether Congress appropriates in full for it or not, but in all other cases prohibiting such deficiency. Have we such a law as that?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have, but the law is not as broad, however, as the gentleman states it, especially in respect to the Army and Navy. There are a number of items which are included in the old act of 1861, but not included in the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My understanding is the intention of the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. TAWNEY. What particular deficiency does the gentleman claim is illegal?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am talking about barracks and quarters now. In other words, Mr. Chairman, my proposition in what I stated a day or two ago is, in the question of barracks and quarters, the Department has no right to create any deficiency whatever, and that Department must be governed by the amount of money that Congress is willing to appropriate for that subject from year to year; in other words, it is not included in the list that is necessary for the actual maintenance of the Government for them to create a deficiency, and therefore it is prohibited by the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. TAWNEY. The difficulty about the position of the gentleman from Iowa is the fact that this is a deficiency, in the first place, of 1905——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is 1908——

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the antideficiency law was enacted. I want to read what General Aleshire said in response to this question:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is "For barracks and quarters for troops, $209,036.69." Is that on account of Cuban occupation?
General ALESHIRE. No, sir. That is for 1905.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to hear about this item for the fiscal year 1908, $4,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will come to that. The general statement covers it, I think, as I now recall it. I will read:

That is because of the failure of the people to submit their accounts in time for settlement. That covers three accounts that they failed to get in. One is in favor of The Hoskin Brothers Construction Company. They had a contract dated January 24, 1905. They completed the contract September 17, 1907, which is after the end of the fiscal year. It was for the construction of some barracks and storehouses at Lawrence, Ind., $31,527.72; Wallace Construction Company, contract dated January 22, 1905, completed September 30, 1907, construction of officers' quarters at Lawrence, Ind., the amount being $32,504; Warren B. English Company, $145,179.97, for the construction of 21 buildings at Whipple, Ariz., contract dated August 15, 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. Are those buildings completed?

General ALESHIRE. They are just about completed now; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you asking for an additional appropriation for the Whipple Barracks, Ariz., for the next fiscal year?

General ALESHIRE. I think not. I have not the list with me.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you in this instance tell us how much was turned back on account of not receiving the accounts before the expiration of the year?

General ALESHIRE. One thousand one hundred and seventy-six dollars. The Auditor had passed some of them. They have been paid and suspended, and the suspension can not be removed until the funds are reappropriated.

Now, of these divisions, one is for the contract of January 24, 1905, and the other arises under the contract dated January 22, 1905, for the completion of certain work that was authorized by law. Now, the accounts were not rendered in time and the work was not completed in time to be expended out of the appropriations that were made, and it is necessary to appropriate for that purpose now in order that these contract obligations may be met.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman does not yet cover what I am anxious to get at. I think the gentleman will find that these contracts are in excess of any appropriation that was made by Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. This amount is required to cover the additional expense for rents in the fiscal year on account of Cuban intervention.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have no information as to that part of it. The point I want to make is that if the Department makes a contract to-day for barracks and quarters, or makes a contract on the 1st day of June, out of appropriation for barracks and quarters for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, the very minute that the contract is made that amount is available until expended and not covered back into the Treasury at least for two years.

Mr. TAWNEY. The ruling of the Auditor is entirely different from the understanding of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not. That is a difference of opinion between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and myself.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was in this particular case. The gentleman referred to another thing, namely, that this would be an illegal deficiency if it was in addition, or if it was on account of the Department having expended more money for the given object than was appropriated for the fiscal year 1908. In order to have a clear understanding of what is included, I want to read from section 3732 of the Revised Statutes, and it will be seen that it is therefore eliminated from the annual deficiency law in regard to Army and Navy expenditures:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, that brings back the same proposition. The gentleman's amendment carried on an appropriation bill I think is wider and broader than that, and, if broader, would, so far as it conflicts with anything there, repeal it, no matter if it is in the Revised Statutes, being passed at a later date. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], for his guidance in the future, because the probabilities are that he will be chairman of the committee indefinitely, that where Congress makes a specific appropriation for any line of public work not going to the maintenance of the necessary and lawful function of government, as it would on clothing and subsistence, and that line, that is a legitimate deficiency if Congress does not appropriate enough; but for any line of public work not going to the support of the Government directly when the Department goes beyond the appropriation it has no right to come here and ask for a deficiency appropriation.

So far as I am concerned, I want to serve notice now that hereafter as long as I shall occupy a seat on this floor I am going to try to compel the observance by the Departments of the act of Congress along this line.

Mr. PAYNE. That will also be for an indefinite period.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That will also be, I hope, for an indefinite period. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that if a contract for the doing of a certain work is made in the fiscal year for which an appropriation has been provided that appropriation lasts for two years? Now, if the obligations created under that contract and accounting are not closed before the expiration of two years thereafter, then the balance of the appropriation, whatever it may be, lapses and goes back into the Treasury, and in order to make up that balance it is absolutely necessary to have an appropriation. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In case the two years lapse and it is covered into the Treasury it is not a deficiency. It is the lack of getting the work done in that time.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all this is.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Congress has appropriated it and authorized it, but where it is a deficiency it is simply an excess of the amount the Department desired to expend over the amount authorized by law.

I want to say, while on my feet, to the gentlemen on the other side of the House, I hope that they will take cognizance of the fact that about $4,618,000 of the money apparently for the Army was for the pacification of Cuba, and not properly chargeable to the Army in the United States. I imagine and believe that every citizen of the Republic indorses the intervention of the United States in Cuba when it became so lawless that it was necessary for this Government to exert its power to assure stable government there; so that, no matter what it might cost, that should be paid in fulfillment of the sentiment in the United States to establish in Cuba a stable, peaceful, and prosperous government, and such expenses should not be charged to the military arm of the United States. And, so far as this idea of recovering it is concerned, I hardly think the Department is to be criticised for not having already received the money back, as I have no doubt that when we move out of Cuba a year from now all our accounts will be adjusted and this money paid back to the United States and covered into the Treasury, but it will never go to the credit of the military arm of the service. It will go back to the general revenues of the country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I can not take so hopeful a view as the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, concerning the reimbursement of the Government for its expenditures in the pacification of Cuba. From the statement made there are now in the treasury about $12,000,000. Now, I understand that our people are at the seat of customs and are collecting these revenues. We have absolute control of them, and there apparently has been no effort made, as was brought out so well by the questions of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON], to recover this enormous sum of money advanced by the people of the United States to pacify that turbulent island. I think that under the law passed a year ago, authorizing the President of the United States to receive, through the Secretary of War, and cover into the Treasury the amount expended by us in the pacification of this island, some steps should be promptly taken, so that the money may be recovered while it is there, while it is free, and while we control it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including all objects mentioned under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1908, $1,318,077.18.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call particular attention that the paragraph just read, appropriating $1,318,077.18, is wholly on account of the Cuban occupation for transportation of the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And the gentleman might further call attention to the fact that that same statement applies to the item of regular supplies, $1,365,388.05.

Mr. TAWNEY. Practically all of it; not quite all. The Quartermaster-General's Department submitted a detailed statement showing just what the items were for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies on account of the fiscal year 1905, including all objects mentioned under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, $78,458.64.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. This is a considerable sum—$78,000—for transportation of the Army back in the fiscal year 1905, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can explain with some definiteness what it is for.

Mr. TAWNEY. On page 91 of the hearings the gentleman will find this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Next is the transportation of the Army and its supplies for the fiscal year 1905, $78,458.64.

General ALESHIRE. That is a lot of small accounts from railroads that failed to get in before the lapse of the appropriation. Some of them are for some construction work, as well as railroad accounts, but they make up that amount. I have the details here.

And then he submitted the details. This is on account of the railroads not getting their accounts in before the appropriation made for the fiscal year had lapsed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am aware that some few years back officers of the Army insisted upon paying for transportation of enlisted men, especially on transcontinental lines, at club rates. For instance, the railroad companies had club rates to parties at lesser rates than for single individuals. They were intended for theatrical parties, baseball parties, and other associations, enabling them to go at lesser rates than the rates for single individuals.

Now, those accounts were adjusted by the officers of the Government and paid at the club rates. After that time the railroad companies insisted upon opening up these accounts and getting extra pay for the transportation of those troops. They appealed to the Department, and they also appealed to Congress, but their application was not approved by the Congress. I should like to know whether any of this large sum is made up of those items.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to say whether the amount here appropriated covers any of the items referred to by the gentleman from New York. The obligation, however, was created by the Department pursuant to law, and the settlement of that obligation was not effected within the year, or within the life of the appropriation which was made for that purpose. When the accounts of the railroad companies under their contracts came to the Department, they came after the appropriation had lapsed, and there was no appropriation out of which they could be paid; hence it is necessary to provide for it now. So far as the obligation is concerned, it was a legal obligation; otherwise the accounts would not have been passed and audited. I do not know anything about the rates.

I think perhaps the gentleman has confounded the appropriation for officers and contract surgeons with the appropriation for the transportation of the Army. I think there was some question in regard to the officers and contract surgeons in the payment of mileage, but I do not think there was anything of that kind involved here.

I want to say, while I am on my feet, that the estimates submitted by the Department to the committee for a deficiency of $50,000 on account of mileage for officers and contract surgeons was disallowed by the committee and is not carried in this bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I read the evidence taken by the committee, especially on this item, and it does not seem to clear up the matter at all. So far as appears on the record it may include those items for extra pay. I believe that when the Government has once settled with the railroad companies or other parties they should not be permitted to come back years afterwards and open up an account and get extra pay for the same service. So far as the record shows this may be made up largely of items of extra pay for the transportation of these troops.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that it is not made up of any items of that kind. The Committee on Appropriations, in matters of this sort relating to obligations created in previous years, to be met out of appropriations that have expired or lapsed, has no discretion in the matter at all. The accounting officers have passed upon these accounts, and no other accounts are allowed on account of previous years except those that have been passed on and are approved by the accounting officers. We must necessarily accept their judgment. Otherwise the Committee on Appropriations would become a mere auditing bureau.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is all right. I take the chairman's word for it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no doubt that the appropriation is all right. I do not want to criticise it, but I do want to correct a little statement of the chairman. He said that it probably included the mileage of officers and contract surgeons.

Mr. TAWNEY. I said that I thought the gentleman was confusing the mileage of officers and contract surgeons with the transportation of the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The contract surgeons get 7 cents a mile for transportation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. My suggestion was not that it included officers, but enlisted men who were transported in squads for the payment of which the Government settled and paid at club rates. The companies received that and then tried to get more. I did not know but that this item included such items of extra pay.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, including all objects mentioned under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1908, $716,163.21.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for information on that item. We gave them a large appropriation for this current fiscal year, and I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not to accumulate reserve clothing, or is it for the current uses of the Army this year?

Mr. TAWNEY. The note accompanying the estimate says:

Of the amount now estimated for $25,000 is required for payment for the campaign badges, bars, etc., manufactured or to be manufactured at the United States mint at Philadelphia, under the provisions of General Orders, No. 4, 1905, and for which no funds have been appropriated by Congress. Forty-five thousand dollars is required with which to provide a supply of clothing for special issue in the coming spring to troops stationed in Alaska, the reduced condition of the appropriation for clothing and camp and garrison equipage for this fiscal year rendering it impossible to provide from it the funds necessary for the foregoing purposes. In addition $146,163.21 is required to cover the expenses of the army of Cuban pacification additional to those which would have been incurred had the troops remained in the United States.

So these are the three items, $25,000 on account of badges, the clothing for Alaska, and the expense of the Army in the Cuban pacification.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That makes about $150,000, and here is an appropriation of $716,000. The gentleman's items on account of Cuba and Alaska and the medals amounts to less than $150,000. Now, what are the other items, amounting to about $500,000 for unless it is another way of getting a larger increase for reserve? I believe they ought to have reserve clothing, and the Committee on Military Affairs is now considering it. We have a special item sent us asking for $2,500,000 to accumulate a reserve stock. I do, however, object to carrying in a deficiency bill anything except deficiencies that are now pressing on the Government, and I submit to the committee if it is not a proper thing to reduce this item by at least $300,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not for the purpose of stocking up. On page 92 of the hearings General Aleshire says:

The $500,000 is explained pretty fully here in the notes, Mr. Chairman. There is a list of the essential articles of clothing which are necessary, and that table shows which articles we are deficient in, and the number in which we are deficient, and the actual cost. The total as shown there is $377,572. That provides only for these articles to bring the stock which we now have on hand up to the quantity sufficient to meet the needs of the service up to June 30. It was thought that the stock should be increased so as to provide for three or four months in addition to that amount, and in view of that fact the estimate was submitted for $500,000.

I have also included in the note a statement showing the distribution, or disbursement, you may say—or rather the disposition—of the appropriation of the last fiscal year; the amount appropriated the last fiscal year, $3,649,000; how much we have added, $246,000, on account of sales and overdraft of clothing for enlisted men. That amount, $3,649,000, has been disposed of in this way: We allowed to the Philippines for the purchase of khaki clothing, etc., $15,000; the payment of employees connected with the clothing of the Army, $373,000; we paid small claims or set aside for that amount a thousand dollars. The authorization of liability cards—those are the amounts we have set aside or authorized, as we express it in the office, to cover the amounts contracted for on account of clothing and equipage. That leaves a balance of $214,644. Of that balance, since the statement was prepared we have used or obligated ourselves for $114,856, which left when this estimate was submitted an available balance of $99,788.24.

The CHAIRMAN. General, how much of this is intended to supply the stores, general supplies, under this head? How much of it is intended to be used this year?

General ALESHIRE. This $500,000. You understand that of the first amount $3,046,000 was for Cuba; $45,000 for clothing that we wanted to send to Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. You need that to send to Alaska before July 1.

General ALESHIRE. Yes. We want to send them in the first ship in the spring so that they can be distributed to the posts. There are only three or four months of navigation. You see, it takes a good while to get our clothing, Mr. Chairman, and we ought to be contracting right now for that which we want five or six months ahead. The uniform which is adopted is this olive-drab color, so-called, a special color, and it is not held in stock. You can not go and buy the stuff. You must have it manufactured.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That confirms my idea that they are asking for a larger amount than there is a deficiency for, for the purpose of accumulating a reserve supply. I am in full sympathy with the theory that we ought to have it, but I don't believe this is the way to get it. It emphasizes the misfortune of our rules by which two committees have current jurisdiction practically over the same thing, one in the deficiencies and the other in the regular bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me read another paragraph or two from page 93 of the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not get your answer, if you made it, as to how much of this, if any, was to be used for the purchase of uniforms to go in stock for this fiscal year.

General ALESHIRE. We ought to have all of this, Mr. Chairman. This $500,000 is the amount that is estimated for that purpose. We may say, of that amount, $377,000 of it is required to purchase the essentials of the uniform to take us up to June 30—the essentials in which we are actually deficient in stock now, as shown by this table in the note.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that so urgent that it ought to be provided for in an urgent deficiency appropriation bill, or could it not wait until July 1, the beginning of the next fiscal year, and be carried in your regular Army appropriation bill?

General ALESHIRE. I think it ought to be provided for now. You know it takes so much time to get this clothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is your stock so depleted at the present time that if you had to wait until the beginning of the next fiscal year and take the appropriation out of the regular Army appropriation bill there would be any inconvenience or loss to anyone?

General ALESHIRE. Of course it would be an inconvenience. We could not fill the requisitions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is your stock so low now that you could not fill requisitions between now and July 1 next?

General ALESHIRE. I think it is, of these articles. We could fill some requisitions, but we will not be able to fill requisitions for all that we are liable to be called upon for, as is shown by this statement. For instance, there are canvas coats, of which we are $10,800 short, and we may be short of what may be called for by the 30th of June. It is the same with belts and other items. Leggings are short, and leather gauntlets and summer drawers, and so are slickers and canvas trousers. They are all short of what we are liable to be called upon to furnish by the 30th of June. Of course if there are no appropriations we simply send the requisitions back after we have exhausted the stock. I was going to say that if it is put over until the next year, of course we could not let out our contracts until after the commencement of the fiscal year, and it would put off our deliveries perhaps a year from now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have given here about $150,000 of legitimate deficiency covering the items of this appropriation, the balance of it, to my mind, indicating they want the reserve stock. Now, the hearings we have had show that the earthquake at San Francisco has reduced their stock, and that the surplus they have been working on for some years is largely reduced, so that for the next fiscal year they will need largely increased appropriation for this item; but our information does not confirm at all the idea that there is any such shortage as this, and that of the contracts out at the time of this hearing there were still $99,000 of the regular appropriation that had not even been contracted for, according to statement just received by General Aleshire. Let us take the $25,000 for badges. I am not very clear on that. I have a great many letters about badges, and I wish the gentleman would refer me to the act that authorizes the badges. I think there is one, but I can not recall it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the Department could very easily do without this appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think they could do without at least $300,000 of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I propose to move to strike out seven and insert four when I have gotten all the information I desire.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If I remember rightly, there was an act passed some years ago authorizing the issue of badges to soldiers of the Regular Army, and subsequently the Judge-Advocate-General issued some sort of an opinion that under that act these badges could be treated as a part of the uniform of the Army. Has there ever been an appropriation from the Committee on Military Affairs or any other committee authorizing the purchase of these badges as part of the uniform of the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not that I know of.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Is a badge a necessary part of the uniform of a regular soldier?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would only be giving you my opinion, and that would not be worth any more than the opinion of any other man who says it is. I would say "no," but some other man might say "yes," and it would be simply a question of opinion. I will move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out, in line 2, page 18, the word "seven" and insert the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 2, page 18, strike out "seven" and insert "four," so as to read "four hundred and sixteen thousand one hundred and sixty-three dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry. Is this subject of cloth, woolens, and material, a subject-matter that is in the jurisdiction of the committee of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And for which they have heretofore appropriated money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; altogether.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the Department pursued the course recently provided for in respect to deficiencies by apportioning the expenditures and then creating legitimate deficiencies under these circumstances.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that this appropriation is not one that the law requires an apportionment. Under the act of 1861, which I read a moment ago, section 3373 of the Revised Statutes, this is one of the appropriations that is excepted from the antideficiency law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Recent legislation does not apply to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is this $500,000 in any proper sense a deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. I read what the gentleman says. Of course the committee in making up or allowing this item took the testimony and relied upon the testimony of the accredited officers of the War Department, men who have the administration of these appropriations in charge, and when General Aleshire was asked, "Is your stock so low now that you could not fill requisitions between now and July 1 next?" and he answered that it was, and gave in detail the particular items where the stock was so low that requisitions could not be met between now and the 1st of next July, the committee relied upon his statement, believing that it was absolutely necessary and knowing that under the statute of 1861 the obligation can be created anyhow, and the committee felt that we were justified in allowing this amount because of its being, as the General has suggested in another part of the examination, urgent and absolutely necessary for the purpose of meeting these requisitions as they come in. He gives a detailed statement.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood that detail covered about $150,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; that is in Cuba.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the hearing upon the estimates he goes further.

Mr. TAWNEY. He says:

They are all short of what we are liable to be called upon to furnish by the 30th of June. Of course, if there are no appropriations we simply send the requisitions back after we have exhausted the stock. I was going to say that if it is put over until next year—

That was what I was trying to do; I did not want to carry it in this appropriation bill if I could avoid it. I wanted it to go in the regular Army bill, and unless it was made clear to the committee it was an urgent and necessary item it would not under any circumstances have been included. In fact, it was the policy of the committee in making up this bill to include only those items which are urgent, and for that reason we went into the matter in detail.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman read again that testimony of General Aleshire why it was necessary this should go in this bill other than in the regular Army bill from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. TAWNEY (reading)—

The CHAIRMAN. Is your stock so low now that you could not fill requisitions between now and July 1st next?

General ALESHIRE. I think it is, of these articles. We could fill some requisitions, but we will not be able to fill requisitions for all that we are liable to be called upon for, as is shown by this statement. For instance, there are canvas coats, of which we are $10,800 short, and we may be short of what may be called for by the 30th of June. It is the same with belts and other items. Leggings are short, and leather gauntlets and summer drawers, and so are slickers and canvas trousers. They are all short of what we are liable to be called upon to furnish by the 30th of June. Of course, if there are no appropriations, we simply send the requisitions back after we have exhausted the stock. I was going to say that if it is put over until the next year, of course we could not let out our contracts until after the commencement of the fiscal year, and it would put off our deliveries perhaps a year from now.

Now, in view of the statement made to the committee by accredited officers of the Army in charge of the administration of this appropriation and administration of the service here in the Department the committee thought it was wise and necessary that this should be included. Now, if in the judgment of the gentleman from Iowa, who is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, we have erred in following the testimony of these men, I have no objection whatever to a reduction of this appropriation. I have no desire—I do not want under any circumstances—to appropriate money that is not for the use of the Army, that is not absolutely necessary, but believing it was, and it was urgent, we carried it for that reason in this bill. The gentleman from Iowa, I am aware, is far more familiar with the needs of this service than I am, and if he, acting upon his own judgment and against the testimony of the officers of the War Department, thinks this can be reduced, I have no objection to it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in support of my motion, I want simply to say that my amendment will still leave them about $250,000, in round numbers, to accumulate supplies going beyond the 30th of June. The Army is 22,000 men short to-day of the authorized strength. We increased the artillery 6,000 last year, and yet we have 4,000 enlisted men less than we had a year ago to-day because of the fact we can not get enlistments. The uniform in the Philippine Islands and in Cuba costs less than the uniform in this country, so that the Army in both of these places is a saving in place of being an additional expense. The Committee on Military Affairs, in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, as I remember now—and I am speaking only from memory—gave the War Department for these allowances every dollar that they asked for. We cut down in transportation of the Army, incidental expenses, and other matters, but for clothing and clothing allowances we gave all that was asked for, and to come in now with seven hundred and more thousand dollars as a deficiency seems to me an excessive amount. The Book of Estimates shows, as a rule, the deficiency amounts to less than $150,000. The items covering the uniforms for those countries are the cheapest kind of uniform that is in use. There is another thing that this committee certainly realizes, and that is in a short time the regular Army appropriation bill for the support of the Army will be before Congress and a large increase in this item is contemplated, and I think is necessary to allow, and the minute it is adopted the Department can begin to make arrangements for contracts and let every one of them on the 1st of July. The preliminary work is done in many lines of public service before the expiration of the fiscal year, to be completed and entered upon as soon as the next fiscal year begins.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Iowa say that this committee contemplates supplying a deficiency in the general appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not a bit; in the bill carrying this item for the next fiscal year we only intend to increase in order to get a reserve supply of clothing for the Army. In the event of an increased number of men they can be cared for. Now we have an appalling shortage of enlisted men. In spite of the bill increasing the enlisted strength of the Coast Artillery we are short over 20,000 authorized enlisted force. It is between 4,000 and 5,000 enlisted men smaller to-day than one year ago.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Than it was a year ago?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. And yet Congress about one year ago authorized an increase of 6,000 in the Coast Artillery.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I notice, in referring to a direct question as to whether it ought to be provided for in the urgent deficiency bill or whether it could not wait until July 1, the beginning of the next fiscal year, and be carried in the Army appropriation bill, the answer was: "I think it ought to be appropriated for." He did not think it was an absolute necessity.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that is something that both the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will agree with me in. Any bureau of the Department should come to the proper committee and make its estimate to cover substantially what it will need for that year, and if there is any shortage whatever in this item it is charged to the Department itself and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not want to encourage any bureau of any Department of the Government with the idea that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over an estimate, and then have it come to another committee and make an estimate appealing for an increase. In other words, I do not think it will cripple the Government by not giving $300,000 more than the Book of Estimates shows. A legitimate deficiency will not cripple them, and will enable them to discharge all the obligations necessary to be discharged prior to the 30th of June next, if this item shall be reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, including all objects mentioned under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, $7,869.40.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether those were deficiency appropriations for the purpose of taking care of contracts made during those periods?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; during the fiscal year 1905.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The Department is short that amount of money and wants it in order to carry out the contract?

Mr. TAWNEY. It wants it on account of not being able to settle the account during the life of the appropriation of 1905.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That simply takes care of existing obligations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement of expenses incurred by the Wabash Railroad Company in the assembling of transportation for the movement of two squadrons of the Eleventh United States Cavalry, ordered by the War Department in April 1906, $283.39.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the last paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the estimate for this item is accompanied by the following note. I read the note, because it is more directly to the point than the testimony taken on that subject:

NOTE.—In April, 1906, the War Department issued orders for the movement of two squadrons of the Eleventh Cavalry from Fort Des Moines to San Francisco for duty in San Francisco in connection with the earthquake and fire at that point. The movement was awarded to the Wabash Railroad under bids opened April 28. Equipment ordered for the journey was 2 standard sleepers, 12 tourist sleepers, 6 baggage cars, 27 horse cars, and 10 box cars, and the Wabash Railroad was requested to assemble the equipment at Fort Des Moines to take care of the movement. Notice was received by the chief quartermaster on the afternoon of April 29 that the movement was suspended. The successful bidder was notified by wire and requested to cancel the order for the movement of the cars. In the meantime this equipment had been started from Chicago and other adjacent points empty for the post, and before it could be stopped certain mileage and trackage charges had been incurred, amounting in the aggregate to $283.39, payable from appropriation "Relief of the Pacific coast." As this movement had been ordered by competent authority, payment of same was approved and payment was made by the depot quartermaster at St. Louis accordingly.

In the examination of the account by the Auditor for the War Department, the law board of that office decided that it was a claim for unliquidated damages in consequence of revocation of the order for the movement of the second squadron of the Eleventh Cavalry, and that a disbursing officer was not authorized to pay same.

The Wabash Railroad Company, upon being advised of the finding of the Auditor for the War Department that the payment was erroneous, refunded the amount, but has requested the allowance of the claim, which I consider a just one, and therefore recommend appropriation for its relief.—J. B. Aleshire, Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army. Approved: Wm. H. Taft, Secretary of War.

The money has been paid to the company, and upon the request of the War Department the money was refunded by the railroad company and the matter was all adjusted, and it was recommended to the committee that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, it ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the case it is a claim for unliquidated damages.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are liquidated. All the accounting officers have approved the account and the amount has been paid.

Mr. MANN. But the Comptroller held that it was for unliquidated damages, and therefore the money was refunded in preference to having the officers stand the loss. Now, there are a great many claims for unliquidated damages pending before Congress and pending before the Department. I see no reason why we should make an exception just because it happens to be a railroad company. The gentleman can find in the various reports of the Government hundreds of cases which the Departments say ought to be paid, but which are for unliquidated damages, and hence not authorized by law. I do not think the item has any place in this appropriation bill for that reason. If it had been authorized by law it would have been paid. The Comptroller decided that it was not authorized by law, and hence it is not paid. It ought to take its standing along with other bills of that sort. I would like to suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill, or some other enterprising Member of the House, that there is a great opportunity for some Member of this House to make himself distinguished by preparing and introducing a bill in the House conferring upon some court or upon the Department, to a limited extent, the power to settle claims for unliquidated damages and to pay them out of the appropriations. There is not a Department of the Government, not one, that is not constantly met with requests for settlement of claims unliquidated, and which ought to be paid. For instance, a vessel of the War Department, the Navy Department, the Light-House Board, or the Revenue-Cutter Service runs into a wharf or pier somewhere, or comes in collision with a sailing vessel or a merchant vessel at some place and damage is caused by the Government vessel. There is no authority of law for the settlement of such claims, and there ought to be; and any gentleman here who will prepare a proper bill upon that subject, I think, would merit and receive the thanks of the Members of this House, and probably have his name attached to a law for many years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the appropriation provided for in this section can not be made in a general appropriation bill unless it is either a judgment of the Court of Claims or an audited claim. The Chair understands that it is neither a judgment of the Court of Claims nor an audited claim, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY.

For one professor of military hygiene (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as major, $500.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I make the point of order to the paragraph just read, for the purpose of inquiring of the Chairman what this paragraph is. It seems to be simply an increase of salary, and in that case it ought not to be on a deficiency bill. I would like to ask the gentleman the reason for it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The law originally reported in the form of a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, approved June 28, 1906, created the office of professor and this item as submitted provides the additional pay to which he is entitled under the statute.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, you mean that the statute gives him an additional $500?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is in the statute now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How, then, did it happen to be in an urgent deficiency bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no appropriation for paying it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I make the point of order against the item.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How long has it been the law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Since June 28, 1906.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a matter, I suppose, that comes under the jurisdiction of the Military Committee.

Mr. MANN. It provides pay of lieutenant-colonel; a major may have been there.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas is familiar with this subject, and, as he has made the point of order, I yield to him. He makes the point of order if the gentleman from Maine does not want to adhere to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I did not know anything about it and wanted information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it can be stated entirely differently from the manner in which it was stated by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs refused to recommend and the law that was enacted did not provide for a professor, in one meaning of that word. The question was discussed and fully considered by the committee, and on the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Military Academy that an officer of the Medical Corps, then stationed at the Military Academy, could perform the duties, a surgeon was detailed to do the work of instructing the cadets in military hygiene. That work occupied about ten hours in two months during the spring. The committee fully considered the matter, and made up its mind there was no reason why he should be a professor. A professor is a permanent officer of the Academy, having the rank, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], of lieutenant-colonel. They may detail to this duty of teaching military hygiene an officer of any rank. Here is the language of the estimate and request as submitted to the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLAYDEN (continuing):

Provided, That the position shall be filled by the detail of an officer of the Army, who, while so serving, shall have the pay and status of other professors.

And then:

Pay of professor of military hygiene (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as major, $500.

Now, here is the language of the act, the first time that this was provided for by law:

That the Secretary of War may detail an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army to the Military Academy as professor of military hygiene.

That is the first appearance of it. I want to call the attention of the Chair to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the date of it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Nineteen hundred and seven.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is June 2, 1906. Congress was not in session in June, 1907.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask your attention to the language of the act, and specially to the law that provides for an instructor of ordnance and science of gunnery in the same law. It says: "For pay for one instructor of ordnance and science of gunnery (major), in addition to pay of captain, $500." Then comes the provision for an instructor of military hygiene:

And the Secretary of War may detail to the Military Academy as professor of hygiene (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as major.

Omitting, as you see, the provision for the $500 additional pay.

Then right below it, and showing the distinct plane upon which this officer was put, is the following:

For the pay of one associate professor of mathematics (major) in addition to pay as captain mounted, $500.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas claim that there is a law permitting the assignment of an officer as a professor of military hygiene, but that there is no law fixing his compensation? Is that the contention of the gentleman?

Mr. SLAYDEN. He is an officer detailed—not as professor—simply an officer serving at the Military Academy, to whom these additional duties of teaching for a brief time are assigned.

The CHAIRMAN. Without any provision being made for increased compensation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to add to that contention my contention that by the terms of the law this is entirely different from any law creating a professorship, but that under this the Secretary of War may detail an officer to perform these duties, they being so trival, in the judgment of the committee, ten hours a week for not to exceed two months in the year, that we would not authorize the creating of a professorship out of it, but did allow the detail of an officer already on duty at West Point to discharge this duty, if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, he could do it in addition to his other duties. That is my contention.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the whole trouble arises from the language of the act authorizing this detail, which language appears in the Army appropriation bill:

That the Secretary of War may detail an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army to the Military Academy as professor of military hygiene.

The officer detailed is a major. Now, section 1336 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

Each of the professors in the Military Academy whose service at the Academy exceeds ten years shall have the pay and allowances of colonel, and all other officers shall have the pay and allowances of lieutenant-colonel.

Now, if the Committee on Military Affairs had been as careful as the members of that committee now think they were, and had omitted the word "professor," then their contention would be good; but they authorized the detail of an officer as "professor of military hygiene," which brings him clearly under the provisions of this general statute. This is authorized by law, and that is the reason that it is here. They created the obligation, but refused to make the appropriation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand there has been an actual detail?

Mr. TAWNEY. An actual detail; and this is for the difference between the pay of a major who has been detailed as professor of military hygiene and his pay as lieutenant-colonel while on detail as professor of military hygiene.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota send to the desk a copy of the law to which he refers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the hearings on this proposition when it first came before the Committee on Military Affairs showed that by an executive order a surgeon stationed at the West Point Military Academy was then discharging the duties of a teacher of military hygiene, for a brief time during the spring of the year. The committee refused to entertain the idea of having a professorship created there for that purpose. The language of the bill as reported by the committee was "instructor."

I admit, of course, because the records are against me, that at the instigation of gentlemen legislating in another part of this building the word "professor" was substituted for "instructor;" but, Mr. Chairman, it was regarded by the committee of conference as being a mere definition of the duties of this position; in addition to being a surgeon to care for the health of those stationed at West Point, this man by detail was made a teacher, an instructor or professor; that is, he was merely detailed to teach.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what all of them are detailed to do.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did it appear before the Committee on Military Affairs that the man had been actually detailed—an independent surgeon who was giving instruction?

Mr. CLAYTON. One surgeon had been detailed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was by Executive order. There were four surgeons at West Point; it is a select community; they haven't very much to do. Military hygiene is an important thing, and they had an Executive order for one of the surgeons there to be detailed to teach military hygiene.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "Executive order"—an order of The Adjutant-General?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; the Secretary of War, by direction of the President.

Mr. MANN. An order by the Secretary of War; that is the way all officers are ordered around.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The full hearings will show that they came to us to create a full professorship, the same as we did for ordnance and gunnery. We refused, but simply confirmed the detail of a teacher there, as we understood it, without providing extra pay, and told them that we would not provide extra pay. In the general discussion it was then understood that this would give the man a better status in teaching military hygiene to do that much. Now, it is possible that the word "professor" may be construed to hold that this is a full professorship, but if you take the language of the law I do not see how it is possible to so construe it. In one place you create a professorship absolutely, and in the other case you say that the Secretary of War may detail a man to teach a certain thing. It is not a full professorship; it simply gives him the status to teach by Executive order what they are determined he should do.

Mr. VREELAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he did not make the same contention last year, and was not the decision of the Chair against it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have made the same contention every time it has been up.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I will ask the gentleman from Iowa why he doesn't change it and make it what the Military Committee recommended, and what he says they intended to do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My opinion is that the better way would be to leave it out entirely. I do not think there is any deficiency here.

Mr. TAWNEY. He could sue the Government and get his pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He couldn't sue the Government for a penny.

The CHAIRMAN. By existing law the Secretary of War is authorized to detail an officer as military professor of hygiene, and such detail has been made. Section 1336 of the Revised Statutes fixes the salary of professors of the Military Academy. It seems to the Chair that while such detail lasts the officer comes properly under the head of a professor at the Military Academy and is entitled to pay provided for by the section referred to, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 19, beginning with line 2 and ending with line 3, the following words: "For one professor of military hygiene, lieutenant-colonel, in addition to pay as major, $500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers the amendment which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk reported as follows:

On page 19 strike out lines 2 and 3.

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply want to call the committee's attention to the fact that this would simply strike out the appropriation of $500, and that it would not change existing law in the least, and would authorize the officer to bring suit in the Court of Claims against the United States Government, with all the annoyance incident thereto. Now, if you are going to do anything, the proper thing to do is to repeal the law, as the Committee on Military Affairs suggested in the discussion a year ago. I think the man is entitled to the compensation authorized under the law and could successfully recover it in the event of his bringing suit, as he would do.

Mr. PRINCE. As to that, that is a question for the court. Undoubtedly here is an officer receiving $500 for practically doing nothing in addition to his duties as an officer.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, that is something that his committee ought to have considered when they originally authorized the creating of this office.

Mr. PRINCE. I think the statement has been made by my colleague that the Military Committee of the House is not in the slightest degree responsible for the words or language in the military bill now under discussion.

They prepared, so far as the House was concerned, a bill which would not make this officer a professor, and we ought not to be charged with it here in this branch of the Congress. If another branch of it saw fit to do otherwise, that was a matter for another branch of the Congress, but the way for us to protect ourselves here is to try and save this kind of fudging and slipping in here and there little suggestions and amendments that are constantly costing this Government a considerable amount of money; and about as good a way to stop it is for the House to put its foot down on that kind of legislation that comes in under the guise of legislation which costs, as it does here, $500 to the Government. If we do that I think there will be less of it practiced on the committees of the House, and less officers in the different branches of the civil service of the Government, as well as the military and naval branches of the Government, trying to lobby through this kind of legislation. For that reason I insist on a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. PRINCE) there were—ayes 26, noes 18.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. PRINCE and Mr. TAWNEY were appointed tellers.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining and improving the grounds of the post cemetery, $500.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The cemetery is cared for under the appropriation made in the bill carrying the appropriations for the Military Academy from year to year. For something nearly twenty years a thousand dollars a year was all that was ever asked for. This does not include the keeper of the cemetery, but simply the common labor of caring for it. At one time one of the old graduates of the Military Academy was on the Board and proposed that if Congress would give an extra appropriation he would superintend the work—he was an engineer officer, I think—and make the designs for a largely improved cemetery, and that after this had been done, then the care of it would drop back to the old amount. We gave $2,000 for a year and then $4,000. The plans were adopted. A few acres of additional ground were taken in, but no part of this $1,000 had gone to the care of the new grounds or the making of improvements on the new grounds. It is for the care of the cemetery proper. The extra appropriations were for taking care of the new grounds and bringing it into a proper state of cultivation. After very full hearing the Committee on Military Affairs believed that the time had come when $1,000 would be sufficient to care for that cemetery for the next fiscal year, the one we are now on.

It is another one of those cases where it seems to me that where you have your full hearing and the committee charged with the responsibility of the appropriation decides they will not need so much for a specific purpose the authorities charged with the disbursement of that appropriation should confine their expenditures to the amount authorized by Congress. I am not going to move to strike it out, but I am going to say to the Committee on Appropriations that if they were one-half as careful and critical in their own actions as they are in scrutinizing the action of other committees, they would have said to the authorities as they came for this $500, "You have had your day in court, Congress has passed on what you ought to have, and you must cut your coat according to the cloth the Government has given you." It is not one of those cases where any harm would have come to the authorities or the cemetery if it had not been given. It is one of those cases where the authorities could have complied with the law without injury to any interests, and while I am perfectly willing for the House to give them the extra $500 or $5,000, if they desire it, I want the Committee on Appropriations when we bring our bill in to remember that every time we try to save they insist on giving away.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman wants them to let up on him if he will let up on them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I want them to keep it up, but I would like them when they come to their own action to apply a little of the same advice they are so free to give all the rest of us to their own action.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. A sort of warning.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, in regard to this item, the amount appropriated for the current year is $1,000. That is for the cost of maintenance and labor of cemetery at West Point. The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000 for maintenance December 1 was $406. The expenditures made during this current fiscal year were all made for absolutely necessary purposes, including labor. Now, $406 is the amount that remains unexpended. This amount, we were told, would be sufficient to pay for necessary labor through the winter, or until about April 1, 1908, leaving nothing whatever to take care of the cemetery from April 1 until July 1. Now, in the investigation which the Committee on Military Affairs made, when they made this appropriation and reduced the estimate which was made, they did not take into consideration all the expenses necessary for the upkeep of this cemetery. The number of burials in this cemetery July 1, 1906, to June 30, 1907, were twenty-six and the number to date since July 1, 1907, is fifteen. The indications are that the interments each year will be as great, if not greater, than the preceding year. Then, in addition to that, there were from 18 to 20 acres of land added to the cemetery, which had to be taken care of out of the current appropriation, and in consequence of that the appropriation is not sufficient to maintain the cemetery beyond April 1 of this current year. Rather than see the cemetery neglected the committee listened to and approved the recommendation made by the officer in charge of this appropriation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word additional. We gave $1,200 for a man to superintend the cemetery, and all this is to pay the common labor——

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. He must pay out of this for all tools, seeds, and everything that is incident to the maintenance of the cemetery.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is to cut the grass and care for the graves, and all that, but I want to say to the gentleman for at least some twenty years a thousand dollars is all they ever asked for. It is not to care for the new ground especially, because we gave some $6,000 to put that in order, and the testimony before us then was this was for the cemetery proper. Now, if their investigation has demonstrated the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs cut them too low, we will take it as an evidence of the belief they ought to have $1,500, and will be glad to give it in the future. I do not move to strike it out at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one associate professor of mathematics, major, in addition to pay as captain, not mounted, $200.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to the other item I want to call attention to the fact the difference between the pay of a captain and the pay of a major is $500, and we gave this and have always given the officer here, that they have treated as a deficiency, $500, but as it is for a very excellent officer I think it would be all right for him to have $1,000 a year extra. I do not feel like moving to strike it out or raising any question on it. We have made the appropriation of $500. The words "captain, mounted," are used in the language. They wanted $700, and a cavalry captain has come in now. The pay of a captain, mounted, is $200 more than the pay of a captain of infantry. They have never had the $700 for that professorship, although they have had captains repeatedly there, and it is only in the last two years they have brought in a deficiency on it. In my judgment it is not a deficiency, but I further think the man is more than earning it, although we would not undertake to increase his pay because we did not want to discuss the point of order on the subject. He is earning a great deal more than that in the care of the cadets, and, as far as I am concerned, I would like to see him get it.

The Clerk began to read——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That sort of statement should not——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had commenced reading the next paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I can not help it; I rose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the increased pay of this officer has been estimated for in House Document No. 506 at $500. The difference is in pay between captain, mounted, and a major. The present incumbent is a captain, not mounted, requiring $700 to meet this increase. Therefore there is only $500 appropriated for 1908, and the law expressly authorizes the additional $200 of pay to the professor. The man is entitled under the law to the additional compensation because of his rank, and he is detailed to that position.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think where an estimate is made before the Committee on Military Affairs and they report, in their judgment, that the money ought not to be appropriated that the Department ought to be given a chance to go before another committee not fully familiar with the subject and work that committee for an additional amount?

Mr. TAWNEY. No——

Mr. MANN. Is not that the question here?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not at all the case. The amount appropriated for by the Committee on Military Affairs was the difference between the pay of the officer who was then filling the position and the amount of compensation that officer was entitled to while in that position under the law.

Since that time there has been a transfer and an unmounted captain has been assigned to this duty, who is entitled to $200 more compensation because of his rank. That is the reason it comes in. It is not because the Military Committee gave all that was estimated, which was $500, and it was the difference at that time between the pay of the officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am in error in my statement, because it is not a commissary. It is the associate professor of mathematics. I have not looked that up, except I know that we gave them the additional pay of $500.

Mr. TAWNEY. That does not give him the money he is entitled to for the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. If he had asked $500 from the committee and the committee had given it to him——

Mr. TAWNEY. That is entirely another state of facts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is on the same principle that the captain was appointed, and the Committee on Military Affairs gave the $500 difference in pay. This provides "captain, not mounted," and we gave the other man "captain, mounted."

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursing the Corps of Cadets, United States Military Academy, an amount equal to the per diem commutation of rations at 30 cents each (provided for in the appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, fiscal year 1908), for the battalion of cadets while absent from the Military Academy attending the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, $1,072.50.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on that and secure a little information, if possible. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the bill carrying appropriations for the Academy, approved March 2, 1907, has this proviso:

For expense of subsistence of cadets while attending the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, at the rate of $1.50 per day—

Now, the regular ration of 30 cents—for each cadet in attendance, $6,000, to be immediately available.

The Government took the Corps of Cadets down there and gave them $1.50 a day, fully supporting them during the trip, and now we find a deficiency on the regular appropriation of 30 cents a day for rations, while the Government was giving them $1.50 a day in place of the 30 cents. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is a good deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that they are allowed 30 cents a day at the academy to defray the expense of attendance. Now, they were sent to Jamestown, and because of the fact of their not being at the academy it appears that this 30 cents a day was deducted from the amount that they were entitled to, while the cost of attendance at the academy went on just the same during their absence and as though they had been present all the time. It had to be paid by the cadets in the academy, and it was simply taking that much out of them and requiring them to pay it out of their own pockets—that was all—for the period of time they were away. The 30 cents a day is unquestionably very low, but even while they are absent this 30 cents a day goes to pay their attendants in the dining hall, and so forth, and, of course, their employees had to be maintained while the cadets were temporarily absent. It is simply a question of whether we will pay it or compel them to pay it out of their own pockets.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken in saying that this $6,000 was to pay all their expenses to the Jamestown Centennial. It was only to pay subsistence, and nothing else. And it was never dreamed that there could be a deficiency claim in for subsistence for the men who were at Jamestown.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is not a deficiency at all on that appropriation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not a deficiency, but it is a reimbursing in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Reimbursing them because of the fact that the Auditor does not approve their being paid the 30 cents which they are allowed while they are in the academy for attendants in the dining hall.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BONYNGE in the chair). Why does the Auditor refuse to allow it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Simply because Congress had appropriated for their subsistence at Jamestown during their absence from the Military Academy. But, as a matter of fact, the expense covered by the 30 cents a day went on just the same while they were away.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was it not because there was no law authorizing it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] does the Auditor think the appropriation of $1.50, which I understand was paid while they were absent, repeals the decision of 30 cents a day while they were absent?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; that is what was held by the Auditor. I am not contending against the point of order at all. I am simply answering the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. HULL or Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall insist on it. I want to say further, though, that I want to put myself right in the RECORD to this extent, that the statement of the gentleman that the expenses at the academy went on just the same as if the cadets were there can hardly be true. Four hundred active young men were away.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will give the testimony of the Superintendent and let the gentleman from Iowa state whether his statement is correct or the statement of the Superintendent is correct. I am giving my information based on what the Superintendent said.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Minnesota to contend against the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not contend against the point of order; but I want this statement to go into the RECORD of what Col. H. L. Scott of the United States Army, Superintendent of the United States Military Academy, said:

It is necessary to maintain the messing establishment at West Point and to keep on the pay rolls the employees of this department of the academy during the absence of the corps. The cost of subsistence of the cadets at West Point averages about 55 cents a day, and this will be increased by at least 200 per cent, and probably more, during their visit to the Exposition. To charge the individual cadet with this additional expense would result in putting some of them in debt, and thus depriving them of certain privileges and liberties which only cadets out of debt are allowed to enjoy. Similar action to that now requested was taken when the cadets went to Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President in March, 1905, the item covering the subsistence being at that time put in the Army appropriation bill.

Now, these are the facts in regard to the matter and the reason why the Committee on Appropriations recommended favorably the allowance of this item.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One word. I want to say that the cadets get a little over $50 a month while they are in the academy. I think it is ample. They undoubtedly have some little expense in connection with the mess when they are absent, but not nearly to the extent of 30 cents a day. But in view of the fact that it would put any of them behind the least bit, I will not insist upon the point of order, although I think it is no way to get an increase of pay for the cadets.

The Clerk read as follows:

BACK PAY AND BOUNTY.

For payment of amounts for arrears of pay of two and three year volunteers, for bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, for bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, and for amounts for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States, and to soldiers on furlough, that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1908, $300,000.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21 and line 16 add after the word "dollars," as follows:

"And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enter upon a roll to be known as the veteran volunteer roll every surviving soldier of the Union Army who served eighteen months, between April 20, 1861, and July 15, 1866, who has been honorably discharged, to be paid out of moneys appropriated for pensions, the sum of $1 per day, from and after the date of his application for the benefits conferred by this act."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire a vote on this amendment at this time, but I desire to make a statement on behalf of the 175,000 veterans of the civil war who are interested in this bill. I wish now only to present the reasons why I have introduced the bill (H. R. 7625). I take it that the Members of this House desire to know, in the first place, how much this bill will cost if enacted into law. I have been consulting the experts in the Pension Office, and so near as I can ascertain it will take the first year about $17,500,000. The amount will be reduced every year by 15 per cent; and the experts in the Pension Office say that at the end of nine years there will be practically no appropriation called for, because the veterans who will be benefited by this bill are the older class of soldiers and will practically all be dead in about nine years.

It is estimated in the Pension Office that 175,000 men will be included under the provisions of this bill. The estimates of the Pension Office differ as to the average amount that the veterans are receiving now. It varies from $17.50 a month to $20 a month. I have estimated it at $20, and from that estimate it will take $17,500,000 the first year. I have within the last thirty days received about 3,600 letters from soldiers scattered throughout the Northern States. I have issued no circulars; I have prepared no blank petitions. It is a spontaneous contribution of these old soldiers, the men with whom I touched elbows for four years in that terrible war. I have had my secretary, with two assistants, go through this enormous correspondence, and I have condensed the opinions of these old soldiers, which I desire to incorporate and print in the RECORD for the information of this House. I think it is due to the Members of the House to know the purpose of this correspondence—letters from veteran organizations and resolutions by patriotic societies.

I understand also in the Pension Office that the so-called McCumber Act of February 6, 1907, is taking out of the Treasury of the United States about $20,000,000. Now, these statistics are very difficult to obtain, even by the officials of the Pension Office, but I have made my best effort in the Pension Office to ascertain what proportion of this $20,000,000 goes to the men who fought the battles of the civil war and what proportion of this $20,000,000 has been paid out to the men who served ninety and one hundred days, and I estimate that over $12,000,000 of this money goes to the ninety and one hundred day men.

And this, my fellow Members, is not satisfactory to the veterans of the war. Let me illustrate. At the opening of the Atlanta campaign there came down to us to join that Army a division under the command of General Hovey, of Indiana. We called them "Morton's boys" (Governor Morton at that time being the war governor of Indiana). The average age of those boys was about 19 years. A large number of them were not over 16 years old. They went through that wonderful Atlanta campaign and served until the close of the war. I have had over a hundred letters from those boys, old boys now, saying that under the McCumber Act they can not get a dollar of pension because they have not yet arrived at the age of 62 years.

In presenting this matter to the House I assume that you desire to be the guardians and protectors of these old soldiers who fought the fiercest, the longest enduring, and the bloodiest battles of modern times.

[The time of Mr. SHERWOOD having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Now, I have here a letter from an old veteran who enlisted for three years in 1862, being then 16 years old. There are thousands of these, yes, 10,000 of them, as you will ascertain at the Census Office. This man is now 62 years old and can only get $12 a month. If he was 18 when he enlisted he could get only $12. Here is another soldier who enlisted in 1864 for ninety days, who is now 75 years old, and is drawing $20 a month under the McCumber bill.

I appeal to you, Members of the House, as I feel a deep interest in these men. This matter is very near to my heart. I appeal to you to give this correspondence, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, your careful, your scrutinizing, and your patriotic consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to add just one word to what I have said. The soldiers of the civil war to-day are dying at the rate of one every eighteen minutes. They are dying at the rate of eighty every day. Twenty-eight thousand of them died last year. We believe the Panama Canal and the construction of new battle ships can wait, but the old soldiers can not afford to wait. I ask justice for the men who stood behind the guns. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD these letters and testimonials from veterans, also a copy of my bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include certain letters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following are the letters and testimonials indorsing the Sherwood pension bill:

A bill (H. R. 7625) for the enactment of a veteran volunteer roll.

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the written application of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving volunteer soldier in the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war shall be entered upon a roll to be known as "the veteran volunteer roll:" Provided, however, That each such soldier shall have served with credit as an enlisted man not less than eighteen months in the field with troops in said Volunteer Army between April 20, 1861, and July 15, 1866. He shall have been honorably discharged from service. Said application shall be accompanied with proof of the identity of the applicant as the person whose name appears upon the military record of the military organization to which he claimed to belong, and such application to be placed upon such roll and the identity shall be sworn to in the manner and form provided by law of other applications for pensions. In the event that such applicant has been wounded in the line of his duty and thereby disabled from serving for said term of eighteen months, or was discharged for disability contracted in the service, or was mustered out because of close of war, upon proof of such fact, if he be otherwise qualified, he shall be entitled to be entered upon such roll the same as though he had served for the full term hereinbefore provided for. Any soldier captured in battle or in the line of his duty and serving in Confederate prisons shall have his time of such service counted the same as if he had served in the field.

SEC. 2. That each of the class hereinafter described, when entered upon such roll, shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States appropriated for pensions, the sum of $1 per day from and after the date of his application for the benefits conferred by this act during his natural life.

About 1,000 letters have been received from veterans in territory from Salem, N. H., to Roswell, N. Mex., in the following vein:

B. F. Smith, of Youngsville, Pa., writes: "Your dollar pension bill is the best I ever saw, because it discriminates in favor of the veterans."

John A. Goodwin, of Richmond, Va.: "I served four years in First Massachusetts Cavalry. Surely, for the few years left to us, our country should make us comfortable and free from want and worry. God bless you, General, for the interest you are taking in your old comrades. Your bill, if successful, will bring rest and peace to many an aching heart."

Fayette Wolcott, of Delta, Ohio: "Wishing your labors will prosper, that you will build a monument more enduring than marble."

Hiram A. Buck, Winnebago, Minn.: "Your bill suits the veterans. I will see that the Grand Army of the Republic posts are supplied with petitions in this part of the State."

William Meyer, of Greenville, Ill.: "We are not paupers or beggars, but we want justice, and your bill comes nearer justice than any ever introduced. We are writing our Congressman to support your bill. If successful, all the old soldiers will remember you with gratitude."

William Watson, of Pineglen, Pa.: "The Sherwood pension bill is the only one ever introduced that was not a pauper bill. Now, in many instances, the ninety-day man gets more pension that the veterans who served from 1861 to 1865."

R. L. Sidwell, Chicago: "Your bill is right. It was the volunteer soldier that made the country what it is, and you are heroically right in trying to take care of the men who stood behind the guns."

John E. Bradlish, of Shaftsbury, Vt.: "Your bill is the best that has been introduced since the war. Every old veteran should help you to push this bill through. The old boys are dropping off very fast and we must act quickly."

E. G. Stends, Allegheny, Pa.: "Your bill is the best so far introduced. It will be a grand thing for the old soldiers, now in military prisons, to return to their homes and friends to spend the balance of their years."

John Emerson, of Morrow, Ohio: "Your bill is based upon merit and service, and is just what I have always advocated. All the soldiers in Morrow County are in favor of it. It will save the Government lots of money. I get $12 a month and can't live on it. I will never go to a so-called 'Soldiers' Home.' The Government is spending millions and millions for gunboats that never will do any fighting. Why not spend the money on the boys who did the fighting? Let the big Navy and Panama Canal wait. If your bill passes, you will never be forgotten by any of us as long as we live."

W. A. Carnahan, National Soldiers' Home, of Kansas: "Your bill is just the thing. It helps those who were too game when sick to go to the hospital, while those who flunked and got a hospital record have been blessed with big pensions."

W. A. Heath, Washington, D. C.: "We don't claim the credit from Columbus for discovering America, but we do claim that we have made America what it is to-day—fair in name and honor. Who says the dollar a day is too much for the old boys before they cross the Great Divide?"

C. C. Palmer, St. James, Mo.: "I have talked with a number of the old boys, and they want me to write you for a petition, and I will hustle for signers for your bill."

Lieut. A. S. Palmer, of Memphis, Ind.: "I served all through the war; was wounded at Gettsburg, but went back and saw the thing out. Your bill is just right."

D. Bartlett, of the National Soldiers' Home, of Kansas: "If the old soldiers here had a dollar a day they would be glad to leave this Soldiers' Home forever. I voice the feeling and desires of 99 per cent of the soldiers of this Home."

Andrew Jackson Hill, State Soldiers' Home, New York: "I was not a ninety-day man. I was there in every battle from Antietam to Appomattox. My $12 a month pension would not pay for a room and potatoes at $1.60 a bushel. I thought it was time to stop trying to live on two meals a day, and poor at that, so I came to this Home, but it was jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. I am glad you are using your influence for the soldiers who did the work, which has never been done before."

Joseph W. Gilson, of Anna, Ill., writes eleven pages of a closely written letter, of which the following is a brief extract: "As you are a real friend of the old soldier, I desire to write you fully. I served the whole four years in Goodspeed's battery, except a thirty-day furlough, when we veteranized. I get $12 per month, and had a long fight to get that. Now I am a financial and physical wreck and have to live in a Soldiers' Home. I know another soldier, who served five months and never saw an armed enemy, who was recently raised to $24 per month."

J. W. Hendershott, of Degraff, Ohio: "I send you the names of some old veterans who join me in wishing you success. Every comrade wishes you godspeed."

Col. N. Turk, adjutant of Irwin McDowell Post, Oklahoma, sends a testimonial of 125 veterans, as follows: "We consider your bill the most just and wise measure that has ever been introduced. It takes care of the men who did the hard fighting. We have no objection to the Panama Canal, but don't forget the Grand Army boys' needs in their passing moments from time to eternity."

Twenty-three soldiers of Clairmore, Okla.: "We desire to show how heartily we approve your bill. Every soldier here in this vicinity is for your bill except one, and he was a deserter. We protest against the act of February 6, 1907, for the following reasons: Not that we disapprove of the act giving pensions at the ages of 62, 70, and 75, but that it is an injustice that any soldier drawing a pension for wounds should be deprived of the age benefit also. All the old soldiers here thank you and feel grateful for the interest you are taking in their benefit."

James H. Little, pastor of the Universalist Church of South Paris, Me.: "I believe in the justice and equity of the Sherwood pension bill. The present graded age bill is not equitable. Our nation should recognize this fact and make the last days of its defenders comfortable outside of poorhouses and free from the necessity of appealing to charity. The Sherwood bill would remedy the defect of the present graded pension law. Our ex-soldiers are sending a letter to Senator FRYE in favor of your bill."

Seventy-five soldiers of Fort Scott, Kans., send a joint letter, as follows: "We consider your bill one of much merit. We think it is just and fair in every respect. We also thank you sincerely for the part you have taken in this important matter. All the above signers are veterans who served eighteen months or more at the front."

S. B. Evans, Humansville, Mo.: "The Grand Army post, by unanimous vote, has declared in favor of your bill. The old boys wish to state that we most highly appreciate your efforts to have justice done the men who stood behind the guns. God bless your efforts to do good for the old soldiers. We have written Senator WARNER and our Congressman, G. W. HAMLIN, to give your bill their hearty support."

Two hundred and eighty soldiers and citizens from Williams County, Ohio, send a joint letter and petition indorsing the Sherwood pension bill as a fair and just tribute to the men who loved their country better than life.

John W. Lake, of Parsons, W. Va.: "It does my heart good to see your bill. I am an old Pennsylvania soldier; enlisted in 1861 and discharged July 2, 1865. Was always in active service from start to finish. Now I am old and feeble and can not work, and I get $12 per month pension. But, oh, how light our hearts would be if your bill will be passed. What burdens would be lifted from us God alone knows. Your bill is the greatest pension bill ever gotten up, and God bless you, comrade, is the prayer of your humble and obedient servant."

George W. Reed, of Roswell, N. Mex.: "I hope you can use the manuscript to some advantage to the old veterans. After years of helplessness I am again on my feet, and still receive my $12 per month pension, no more. May God help you in your efforts for the passage of your bill."

H. D. Todd, of Blooming Valley, Pa., writes as follows, inclosing a petition in favor of $1 pension bill: "There is not one of the veterans who have signed who are capable of self-support. I inclose a letter from our Congressman, Hon. ARTHUR E. BAKER, who writes he will do all he can to assist the veteran idea of your bill."

Col. C. M. Howe, Manhattan, Kans., sends the indorsement of Manhattan Post, No. 271, in favor of Sherwood pension bill; also indorsement of Lew Gove Post, 91 members.

George W. Sillings, Sixty-sixth Indiana, sends a petition signed by 31 veterans in favor of the bill.

Curtis B. Roby, Company H, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry, sends a petition signed by 49 veterans.

George W. Windell, Company K, Thirty-eighth Indiana Infantry, sends petition signed by 60, all veterans, saying the Sherwood bill will make comfortable veterans now in want and distress.

Eugene Rawson Post, Fremont, Ohio, indorse formally the Sherwood bill, and inclose petition also signed by 31 veterans.

Greenville (Mich.) Post, Grand Army of the Republic, send petition in favor of Sherwood pension bill signed by 33 veterans.

Robert M. Beuell, Company B, One hundred and eighteenth Illinois, sends petition signed by 9 veterans.

Capt. George M. Sexton, Chicago Board of Trade, sends petition signed by 35, all veterans.

Russell L. Frisbie, Company K, Fifteenth Connecticut, and Demarest J. Smith, Sixth Maryland Infantry, send petition signed by 48 veterans.

Henry Weemslorge, Company A, Thirteenth Illinois, sends petition signed by 27 veterans.

John Cordovi, Company A, Fifteenth New York, sends petition signed by 33 veterans.

James A. Lynch, Company D, Twenty-fourth Wisconsin, sends petition signed by 59 veterans.

Philip Volmer, Company B, Sixth Kentucky, sends petition signed by 30 veterans.

BUCHANAN, MICH., January 18, 1908.

By unanimous vote of William Perrott Post, No. 22, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, Comrade Graham offered a resolution asking your indorsement and earnest support of the pension bill presented by Gen. I. R. SHERWOOD, of the Ninth Ohio District, that it may become a law, believing, as we do, this to be one of the fairest and most just bills yet offered for action by Congress.

Respectfully,

JOHN C. DICK, Commander.
O. F. RICHMOND, Adjutant.

Alern B. Metler, Company F, Fifty-third Illinois, sends a petition signed by 30 veterans.

John E. Jones, Company B, Thirty-first Ohio, sends petition signed by 29 veterans.

Samuel Roby, Company B, Thirty-eighth Indiana, sends petition signed by 34 veterans.

W. H. Alexander, J. C. Byrkett, and W. A. Evans, veterans of Troy, Ohio, send a petition with the names of 100 veterans, and add the following sentiment: "We have talked with a good many who were not in the war, who think your bill ought to pass, and give the old soldiers a square deal."

Harmon A. Jones, Company A, Eighth Iowa Cavalry, sends a petition signed by 43, all veterans.

Jesse B. Green, Company B, Fifth Ohio Infantry, sends a petition with 30 names, all veterans.

UNION VETERANS' LEGION INDORSE BILL.

John P. Donahoe, past national commander and chairman national pension committee, Union Veterans' Legion, Wilmington, Del.: "I have received copies of your bill and reviewed the same carefully. I must pronounce it a very strong and favorable measure to benefit our old comrades. You have done a proper thing in including the Regulars. We were all volunteers together in the early days of the war before the draft. A class of long-standing injustice is that of the men of the United States Marine Corps, who should be added to your bill. Those men who enlisted in the Marine Corps during 1861, 1862, and 1863 never received a single dollar of bounty and when their term expired the war had ended. They were even deprived of the benefit of the veteran reenlisting clause. Success to your patriotic efforts."

Edward Davidson, Baltimore, Md.: "I served four years. The eyes of the veterans are on you now and the dollar-a-day bill, and I hope the Lord will help you."

Frederick K. Harmon, Company F, Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Canal Fulton, Ohio: "Your soldiers' pension bill is eminently just and fair. I enlisted October 25, 1862, and was discharged at Camp Denison May 24, 1865. Was taken prisoner on the skirmish line at Atlanta, Ga., July 22, 1864, the day General McPherson was killed, and was four months at Andersonville. This great nation should try to aid those who have suffered this way."

Thomas Mullen, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho: "Do all you can for the dollar-a-day pension bill. The soldiers who put down the rebellion are all past three score years and ought to have something to keep them in a degree independent."

G. W. Wheeler, Boon, Mich.: "Your bill is more than just and reasonable. There is rank injustice in granting pensions. I know a man who enlisted in 1864, got a big bounty, stayed in the hospital till his discharge, never fired a gun or did a day's duty at the front, came home, was examined, was pensioned $12 a month for 'last stages of consumption,' and is living yet. I, who served at the front, was with Sherman in all his marches and battles, including the famous march to the sea, never drew a dollar of pension."

B. W. Gregg, Company A, First Arkansas Infantry, Fayetteville, Ark., writes that every soldier of his knowledge would rather go to the poorhouse than the Soldiers' Home; that every soldier favors the dollar-a-day pension bill.

David Robison, Company C, Sixtieth Indiana, writes from Hobstadt, Ind., saying the man who stood behind the guns from 1861 to 1865 favor the Sherwood pension bill and have forwarded a petition to Hon. J. H. Foster in favor of the bill.

Henry Pierce, Ramer, Tenn., writes, inclosing a petition in favor of the bill.

Capt. L. Murray Wilson, Tipton, Mich., urges the immediate passage of the bill, as in a few years the soldiers will all be dead.

Soldiers from the National Soldiers' Home, Milwaukee, Wis., write complaining of the injustice of the McCumber law and of the prison character of a Soldiers' Home, saying the Sherwood bill would be an actual saving to the Government, adding the following: "Please withhold our names. If it should be known to the officers who sends this, I would be driven from this place."

Charles Wildes, Exeter, Me., writes: "I am too old and crippled for work. My pension is not sufficient for actual needs, and if Congress is ever to do anything the time to do it is now. Hope you will be successful in passing your bill for the old comrades."

Michael McChaseton, National Soldiers' Home, Virginia, writes: "General, you were never more right in all your years than now, when you advocate a dollar a day for the old veterans."

J. H. Tourjee, Ormond, Fla., writes: "Send me a copy of your bill which gives honor where honor is due, to the old soldier. What we do for the gun holders must be done quickly, as they are going fast."

Col. W. H. Alexander, Troy, Ohio, commander A. H. Coleman Post, says: "Our soldiers here will send a petition to our Congressman asking that the bill be passed."

Rev. W. H. Mentzer, pastor First Baptist Church, Allegheny, writes: "It is just such a measure as I have long felt should be enacted. I was one of the boys who went out the last year of the war, and was in serious business at Petersburg and around Richmond. Wish you every good," etc.

E. F. Hayes, Sixth Wisconsin, Three Rivers, Mich., writes: "I am getting all the signers I can for your bill and sending to our Congressman. All the old soldiers say your bill is right and the best ever introduced in Congress for the veterans."

Jonas B. Kauffman, Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania, Johnstown, Pa., writes: "The Sherwood bill is the only bill of true merit. It is the only bill looking after the interest of the veterans who fought and won the great battles of the war. The age pension may be all right for paupers, but has no business with soldiers."

Miss Clara Wilson, Mundy, Ill., writes: "All the old soldiers here say your bill is just the one to pass. We wrote our Congressman, HOWARD M. SNAPP, about it, and he wrote he would do all he could toward its passage. Many of our soldiers are being helped by the town. Do all you can; the need is great and the suffering hard to bear. My father was a veteran of the civil war."

J. R. Hindman, Columbia, Ky., a veteran of the Thirteenth Kentucky Infantry; W. H. Hobson, Bowling Green, Ky., colonel, and who was ordnance officer of the Second Division, Twenty-third Army Corps, the command in which the author of the Sherwood bill served, writes: "In looking over my receipts I was impressed with your sober business sense and that you were the best business officer in your command in looking after the needs of your soldiers. And now I wish you success in your bill and will write Representative EDWARDS to do all he can to help you."

C. Weatherwax, Lockport, N. Y., writes as follows: "After reading your pension bill, recently introduced in the Congress as the veteran volunteer bill, I will say that in my estimation it is the best bill ever introduced in the House of Representatives from an honor standpoint. Under former bills enacted into laws, all the dead beats and tramp soldiers are equally well provided for with those who did the actual work without any apparent distinction. Dear General, I wish to thank you for this mark of justice."

Louis Schmidt, Coulter Post, New York City, writes to inclose a petition, and says: "If we can do something to push that bill, please answer."

Jacob H. Unruh, Cheswold, Del.: "I was wounded in the seven-days' fight at White Oak Swamp, and now, in my seventy-seventh year, I am depending on my pension. I wish to God your bill may pass. All soldiers so wish."

Mart Armstrong Post, Lima, Ohio, at a regular meeting, with full attendance, by unanimous vote, recommended the passage of your pension bill and the adjutant instructed to inform you of such action. The membership of the post, 216, and the action was taken after full discussion. Signed: G. E. Copeland, post commander; O. H. Hollister, acting adjutant.

At a called meeting of veterans, held at Wauseon, Ohio, under a published call for a meeting of all soldiers and members of Lozure Post, the Sherwood bill was discussed and a rising vote taken, every soldier rising to be counted. One hundred and twenty-five veterans were present, and all voted aye.

Josiah Wilson, National Soldiers' Home, Johnson City, Tenn., writes: "That bill of yours for a dollar a day, if passed, would cause great rejoicing and would take the veterans out of want. It would relieve the veterans of these political guardhouses, a just reward to the men who carried the musket without hope of reward.

THE PRIVATE.

Let us offer a prayer for the hero
Who lies unnamed, unknown,
The private soldiers lying
Beneath the sunken stone;
Who fought where the war raged strongest,
And after the day was done
Was merely reported "missing,
With resting place unknown."

The following letter reflects the universal sentiment of old soldiers everywhere:

JANUARY 19, 1908.

Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD:

OLD COMRADE: Allow me to congratulate you on being the only Representative to Congress in over forty-two years that has ever seen the difference between a veteran soldier of the civil war and a so-called veteran of to-day. I am 70 years old, served four years seven months and sixteen days, and receive $20 per month for injuries and rheumatism received in service. My neighbor, who is 75 and served one hundred days, receives $20, and he told me he never was sick a day in his life. God bless you for your effort, but I do not believe you will be able to convince the rest of your colleagues in time for the resurrection.

J. C. ARMSTRONG,
Late of Thirteenth Ohio Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

A California veteran writes: "Your bill is simple justice and the cheapest way for the Government to reward its defenders. I speak from personal knowledge, as I have been a member of a Soldiers' Home ten years. They are unbearable for a decent man, to say nothing of the graft and humiliation a man must bear. As a friend of mine expressed it, it is the halfway place between hell and the penitentiary. Anything, a tent under a tree is preferable. The vile stuff usually served is unfit for human consumption and the arrogance of the management is unbearable, the association damnable; it is high time the three and four year veterans were recognized and rewarded. I put in four years and seven days in the Army of the Potomac and Army of the James in Company L, Third New York Cavalry, one of the best regiments in the United States service. So says the Government history. Please read this to Congress.

"D. M. FISK,
"414 West Forty-seventh Street, Los Angeles, Cal.,
"Late of L Company, Third New York Cavalry."

Case Christance, Soldiers' Home, Johnstown, Tenn: "Your bill granting $1 per day pension to all honorably discharged Union soldiers who had eighteen months or more active field service, is the most fair pension bill ever introduced in Congress and I hope you will succeed in having it passed."

Thomas J. Wright, Crestline, Ohio: "I write on behalf of the old soldiers in this section. Your bill has been discussed and is generally favored by old soldiers here."

John W. Carroll, North Dakota Soldiers' Home, Lisbon, writes against excluding the regulars from the Sherwood bill, not knowing that the bill as now amended does not exclude the regulars.

Orrin Barker, Third Ohio Cavalry, Monett, Mo.: "The McCumber bill does not do justice to the men who served three and four years. Your bill is the only bill to do justice to veterans. Perhaps Senator WARNER will assist you to pass the bill in the Senate."

Col. W. N. Northedge, S. H. Sizer Post, Martinett, Wis., writes that Sizer Post has forwarded to Representatives STEPHENSON and KÜSTERMANN a petition asking their support of the Sherwood bill, and says: "I wish to thank you for your efforts to do justice to my comrades."

William J. Brown, Normalville, Pa.: "Your pension bill is honest and just and our lawmakers should quickly pass it. None of the present generation know what we saw and suffered."

Alfred Garner, Canton, Ohio: "Looking over the pension bills before the present Congress, yours is the best. I learn, also, that a number of men in the Soldiers' Homes have money in bank and farms and are living off the Government. All the soldiers here say your bill is a good one who will remember you. I was told to-day of two soldiers who could not get work because they are too old."

H. A. Vail, Towanda, Pa.: "Your bill is a good one. I hold up both my hands for it. Give the widows the same pensions, regardless of date of marriage."

George W. Reed, Roswell, N. Mex.: "I was a member of the National Soldiers' Home, California, for fifteen months. I wrote a hundred pages on the mismanagement of that and other Soldiers' Homes, and every Congressman could study the facts to advantage."

John W. Keith, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts, Everett, Mass.: "I hope your bill will become a law, as it will be the life of many old soldiers. I will write Mr. ROBERTS to give it his support. Many thanks for your efforts."

Capt. S. V. Taylor, Yountsville, Cal.; "The bill is the only equitable one ever before Congress and the cheapest for the Government. It will close nearly all the National and State Homes. Only a few will stay if they can get a dollar a day to stay at home. Wipe these Homes off the map."

W. F. Steele, Mansfield, Ohio: "Like your idea, but would have it reach more. Wipe out the special examiner and medical examiners. Give the pension direct to the veterans on the date of their discharges."

Frank Walk, Sandridge, Ill.: "I was in the war four years and get $12, the same as the ninety-day man. I would like to have your bill passed immediately."

E. S. Gillette, chairman Scott Post pension committee, Blue Springs, Nebr.: "Excuse lead pencil. A ball through my shoulder makes it slow work with the pen. Scott Post, after a careful consideration of your bill, indorses the same with three cheers. We like it because it recognizes the men who served through the war. In all former legislation the hundred-day men have received the same as the four years' men. We like it because it has no pauper clause."

J. J. Kelser, North Bend, Nebr.: "If you can not make an eight months' limit, or a two years' limit, make it three years. Was a member of the Twenty-third Ohio, a comrade of McKinley, served through the entire war. You will find loyal support from our Congressman from the Third Nebraska District. He should give loyal support to any measure favoring the veteran."

C. H. Jones and 185 other inmates of the Soldiers' Home of Nebraska petition for the Sherwood bill. The former writes:

"We notice that 15,000 private pension bills have been introduced into Congress this session, and have noticed that for years the class of people who get their pensions this way are not those who have served their country best in time of need. Those who have served longest and best are getting the small end of the bargain all the way through. Your bill is the only one which recognizes the services of the veterans, and it comes just as they are ready to drop into the grave. Crowd it that we may get a little benefit before we die. Instead of the Government giving the State Homes a hundred dollars, as now, for every inmate let them add a little more and give it to us direct, so that we may once more feel like men."

Eli Mathews, Clarinda, Iowa: "We send you the copy of a petition sent this day by the old boys of Clarinda, Iowa, to Representative W. P. HEPBURN to support the Sherwood bill, and I thank you for taking up their cause in earnest."

T. M. Davis, Company D, Fifty-first Illinois: "Your bill is the only bill with equity in it. All others are echoes of past bills. I have noticed 60 bills introduced, none of which are of any benefit, but a sop to the veterans. I indorse everything you say as to the cost of keeping these veterans in the so-called "Homes." These Homes, as they are managed, are the biggest grafters out. Your bill gives all the veterans an equal show. It would abolish the enormous expense of Soldiers' Homes—or prisons—and be a great saving to the Government."

Lew Gove Post, Manhattan, Kans.: "Eighty-seven members present unanimously indorsed the Sherwood bill. Thomas Hunter, Company D, Seventy-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, adjutant. Capt. C. M. House, Twenty-fifth Michigan Infantry, of Gove Post, was named 'The Boy Captain' by Colonel Moore, of the Twenty-fifth Michigan. Captain McCord, of the One hundred and eleventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, is also among the Manhattan veterans who urge their Congressmen to support this bill."

Daniel D. Fagan, Dawson, Ohio, who served in the Forty-fourth Ohio from 1861 to 1865, writes that the Sherwood bill is the best of all.

Col. J. W. Cope, One hundred and twenty-ninth Indiana, writes from the Indiana Soldiers' Home that all the old soldiers favor the Sherwood bill, and says: "If all the veterans eligible under your bill were given a dollar a day pension, 75 per cent of them would return to their homes, and that means 75 per cent of the best men here. No doubt it will be said if they should get a dollar they would spend it drinking. A few of them would, but that is no reason why the vast number, who are sober men, should be kept away from their real homes."

D. H. Todd, Blooming Valley, Pa., writes: "Your bill is nearest right of any under my notice. I served from June 1, 1861, to June, 1865, and am opposed to State pensions. The old veterans did not serve to save the State but to save the nation."

C. H. Jones, Third Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, Burkett, Nebr., writes: "Line up every Democrat for your bill. Make your best effort in the line of oratory. Put the matter up squarely to the Republicans. Have your votes recorded and let them go back on us again if they dare. The veterans have been most patient. Year after year the Republicans have been giving the three and nine months' men pensions through special acts. We old veterans are getting very tired of it. We have not much longer to live and would like to die outside the poorhouse."

H. A. Buck, M. D., writes that Stannard Post, Burlington, Vt., passed the following resolutions:

"We, the members of said post, do favor and will do what we can for the passage of the Gen. I. R. Sherwood pension bill, granting soldiers and sailors who served eighteen months or more, and all those that were discharged sooner for wounds, disability and prisoners, $1 a day, or $365 a year for life. The venerable old General calls for support of his bill from all veterans. The resolution was passed unanimously and a copy was ordered furnished the Burlington papers."

H. W. Hunt, Maumee, Ohio, late Ninth Ohio Cavalry, supports the Sherwood bill and says: "The money paid out in pensions is not gone from the people who furnish it, but comes back to them like the gentle dews, or like the vapors of evaporation that return to us in gentle rain to revivify and nourish. The sentiment was never stronger than now throughout the country for liberal pensions."

Andrew J. Sperry, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, Sawtelle, Cal.: "Your bill to give $1 a day to the veterans who saw long service is certainly the most fair pension bill ever brought before Congress. It gives satisfaction to all veterans, particularly in the Soldiers' Homes, as it would enable them to return to their families."

John W. Dyer, Company I, Third Delaware Infantry, Cheswold, Del.: "I served three years and was wounded and thoroughly damaged. It would be a godsend to many."

H. A. Cummings, Ferry, Mich., served three years and thirty-eight days in the Thirty-ninth Indiana Infantry and Eighth Indiana Cavalry and was in the battle of Atlanta after enlistment expired. Then he served seven months in Company G, Fourth Maine Infantry. He writes: "I want to commend you for introducing this bill. I have seen so much pandering and playing to the galleries of the ninety-day men that I had become disgusted and wondered how soon it would be before we who served three or four years would have to apologize for our loyalty in stepping forth so soon to crush the rebellion. Many are the hearts your bill will make glad and I hope our Congressman MCLAUGHLIN will join you in support of your excellent bill."

J. F. Robinson, commander J. C. McCoy Post No. 1, Columbus, Ohio: "McCoy Post indorses the Sherwood bill, and by unanimous vote asks Hon. E. S. TAYLOR, Member of Congress from the Twelfth Ohio District, to give it his support. It is a just and equitable measure, recognizing no distinction between the officer and the private."

Soldiers' Home, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "A hundred soldiers, eligible under the provisions of the Sherwood bill, petition its immediate passage." The letter with petition says 90 per cent of the inmates will quit the Home if the bill passes.

Capt. Greenleaf Cilley, senior vice-commander George Robinson Post, the largest in Clermont County, indorses the Sherwood bill: "If you could have heard the expressions of joy and appreciation of the bill, which has no superior and is the most deserving of any ever before Congress, and the cheers and tigers that were given the Member from the Ninth District in the post and upon the streets of the town, you would feel you were leading your troops to victory on the battlefield. This town is principally inhabited by old veterans of the civil war, who have fought and bled together, who at enlistment were only boys, who endured the long marches together, the days of hunger and of cold, the horrors of prison life and the operating table, and we feel that you deserve the gratitude and heartfelt thanks of every veteran soldier who is alive to-day. Give us the dollar a day, do away with Soldiers' Homes, examining boards, and pension agencies, and save the Government millions of dollars."

Soldiers' Home, Togus, Me.: "Your bill was read to a group of inmates of this Home, and I can assure you it was well received. Give us the dollar a day pension and we will give this Home a wide berth."

C. M. Ellis, chairman Chautauqua County, Kans., veterans, writes of the unanimous indorsement of the Sherwood bill by the soldiers, and says: "General Sherwood, of Ohio, fully realizes and appreciates the sacrifices made and the value of the services performed; and well knowing that, only for these sacrifices, we could not boast of a great nation extending from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf to the Lakes, proposes pension legislation more nearly commensurate with sacrifices made and services performed than has been suggested since Gen. John A. Logan ceased to be our most faithful champion. The Chautauqua County veterans send him greetings and demand our Members of Congress from Kansas to put themselves on record in support of the proposed legislation."

Lyman B. Miner, of Gravette, Ark., writes: "I think the Government in the end would make money by passing your bill. It would stop the expense of Soldiers' Homes, and medical boards, and special agents, etc."

Daniel Lynch, of National Soldiers' Home, Kansas, writes: "I served four years, but am too young to get any benefit from the McCumber law, as I can not prove my age to be 62. I was, in 1861, a friendless, homeless orphan and a wanderer; but I did the fair thing for this Government, and your bill will help save my life in comfort."

Chris C. Layman, Twentieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, writes from Woodville, Ohio, as follows: "Yours is the only bill that provides for those who did the work. The law (McCumber law) that places donothing soldiers with workers on an equality, is a disgrace to the nation."

Capt. J. C. Bartholomew, of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry writes from New Richmond, Mich.: "Your bill is the most acceptable to the veterans of any that has ever been framed. I will see that Congressman Hamilton hears from this post. I do hope it will become a law."

Capt. William Cook, Second Colorado Cavalry, writes from Oswego, Kans., as follows: "The Republicans have held a strong hand on the old soldiers for many years on the promises that have never been fulfilled. I think the passage of this bill will do much to change them from the G. O. P. of tariff robbery of the poor and overflowing coffers of the rich to honesty and equal rights to all regardless of the dollars they possess."

Mrs. Anna E. Wiltsie, of Toledo, Ohio, a prominent worker in soldiers' charity, writes: "Some time ago I visited the National Soldiers' Home, at Marion, Ind., and I was surprised and shocked at the similarity in it to our asylums, penitentiaries, and prisons. What little difference there is between them! 'Tis true they have more liberties than are allowed the criminals and insane, but otherwise the similarity exists.

"What home comforts does the old veteran have in these Soldiers' Homes? A space 8 feet square, a single iron bed, a small locker, and one hard-bottom wood chair. And do you not think, General, that if the money expended in these Homes, to keep them up, was added to an amount sufficient to pay a pension of say $1 a day to the old veteran, would it not be a better way of caring for them? Every old soldier that stood about me that day said if the Government would give them $25 or $30 per month they would go home and never step a foot inside of a Soldiers' Home again."

From the Pacific slope:

OLYMPIA, WASH., January 6, 1908.

Gen. I. R. SHERWOOD:

DEAR COMRADE: In a recent issue of the National Tribune I saw a copy of your pension measure, and all of the old boys in this neck of woods say it is the peach of the whole lot; and if those fellows in Congress don't give you a clean bill, just read the riot act and call on us.

I have F. W. CUSHMAN'S ear on the matter by letter and expect you will have his support.

Your comrade,

LYMAN P. FOWLES,
Olympia, Wash.

Cyrus Ellingwood, of Castleton, Ind., writes: "I stood behind the guns for four years, but as I did not have any hospital record it has been hard work to get any pension to what it ought to be, and have not succeeded. I get only $14 a month, and yet am not able to do a day's work. I think it is time the Government did something for us old vets."

Lieut. W. S. Tripp, writes from Robert Lee, Tex.: "I enlisted in Thirty-third New York at the age of 15 years, and served to the close of the war and never a day absent, and yet I am not a pensioner under the McCumber bill. I have to wait nearly two years, yet there are hundreds drawing pensions under it who saw no service. So I wish you Godspeed in your bill becoming a law that those that were in it from the start until the finish may be at last recognized."

Martin Ridenour, of Peru, Kans., writes: "I thank you for introducing your bill. It has the ring and spirit of Gen. John A. Logan to us old vets. We are tired of the conditions of the McCumber bill, which is a promise if we live to be very old we will get enough for funeral expenses. It is up to Congress now to fulfill the promise made by dear old Uncle Abe on the battlefield of Gettysburg. The time to do is now."

Andrew Jackson Hill, New York Soldiers' Home: "Pass the Sherwood bill and you will have the everlasting gratitude of the men who did the work of putting down the rebellion. I was in the Army of the Potomac and in every battle from Antietam to Lee's surrender, and never saw a ninety-day man and yet they have the bulk of legislation on their behalf. The Government pays the States $12,500 for the support of State Soldiers' Homes, many of them inferior to the poorhouse, the seat of political graft. Give every veteran a dollar a day and let him live at home."

James Kephart, Thirteenth United States Infantry, forwards a petition from Webster City, Iowa, which reads: "We recognize in this bill the measure that would more nearly give justice to the men who served longest and saw the most service than any other bill of which we have any knowledge. It will not add materially to the pension roll; rather, it will decrease it by letting out of the Soldiers' Homes many who prefer not to remain and whose expenses are much more than the bill entails."

B. N. Turk, adjutant Irwin McDowell Post, Enid, Okla., writes: "Our Grand Army post at this place, which numbers about 125 members, sends their sincere and heartfelt thanks to you for introducing the pension bill allowing every ex-Union soldier who served eighteen months in the Union Army from 1861 to 1865 $1 per day for the few remaining days they may live, which at most will be very short. We consider your bill the most just, wise, and grand measure that has ever been introduced, doing justice to all as near as it is possible to do, and paying the soldier who did the hard fighting for this glorious country of ours in that mighty conflict. This $1 per day would release hundreds from the Soldiers' Homes to return with gladdened hearts to their poor friends at home—'ever so humble, no place like home.' Our Grand Army of the Republic national mortality this year, 1907, runs up close to 20,000 who have answered the last roll call. We have no objections to the midwaterway, Panama Canal, and all the great improvements which we should have as a mighty nation, but don't forget the Grand Army boys' needs in their passing moments from time to eternity."

James T. Kent, Danville, Ill.: "I indorse your dollar-a-day bill. As General Butler said, 'These so-called Homes are heaven to the officers and hell to the privates.' Give us the liberty of citizens, not the prison rules of the barracks in time of peace."

Joshua De Weese, Morristown, Ohio: "Your bill is the most sensible measure I have seen, the most righteous, and at the same time the most economical. Cut down our standing army, call a halt on building war ships and sending them around the world in time of peace, and the millions saved can be sent out in pensions; help the veterans and go far toward solving the money question."

Rev. J. H. Little, South Paris, Me.: "The present graded pension law, while good as far as it goes, is not equitable in its provisions. Under this law as it now stands the soldier who enlisted at the age of 18, and served three, and some of them four, years, saw as hard service, was in as many battles, and to-day at the age of 63 to 64 is suffering as much, and is as much disabled as the soldier who enlisted at the age of 36 to 38, yet he must wait twenty years from now before he will be on a pension level with the other soldier as he stands to-day. This is not just or equitable, for the younger man with his fresh vitality when he enlisted, could endure more, and perform more arduous duties than his older companion, and certainly was worth as much to the National Government as the other, and he is just as much crippled to-day, in many cases, as his older companion; thus the present law is partial and unjust in its discriminations. Without the service and aid of these brave men, in that hour of peril, there would have been no rich and powerful and prosperous United States to-day, and it is no more than right that our nation in its present prosperity should recognize this fact and make the last days of the defenders of the Republic days of comfort outside of the poorhouse and free from the necessity of appealing to the charity of the public for bread and clothing. The Sherwood bill will remedy the defect of the present graded pension law."

W. H. Robinson, writing from the Ohio Soldiers' Home, Sandusky, Ohio, says: "I would like to know if it does not cost the State and General Government more than $1 per day to keep soldiers at this Home? Then why not give them $1 per day and let them go home? Besides, these soldiers all get pensions now, and $80,000 pension money was spent in Sandusky saloons last year."

Wirty Namblen, writing from Clarksburg, W. Va., says: "Us soldiers of West Virginia hope and pray you will be successful in your good work. The pension bill passed last winter (February 6) is of no benefit to veterans. The half of us will be in our graves even before we reach 70 years, let alone 75 years. It is plain to be seen that the one that got that bill up did not intend for it to do the soldiers any good. The craziest man in the West Virginia asylum could have framed a better bill."

C. P. Nash, writing from Brattleboro, Vt., says: "As a soldier in that unpleasantness, I would beg to congratulate you, and assure you that thousands, yes, tens of thousands, who, with stooping forms and tottering limbs, are now waiting, waiting for the command to cross the great divide, will call you thrice blessed. At every fireside where an old ex-Union soldier is found your name will ever be mentioned with deep respect and love.

William Meyer, veteran of Greenville, Ill., writes: "I am yet too young to get benefit from McCumber bill. Age should cut no figure, anyway. All we ask is pensions on merit, and your bill does that. If you can't get $1 a day compromise on 75 cents."

Capt. William A. Ogden, Ness City, Kans.: "Thanks for your bill. It is nearer a service pension."

Rev. Robert D. Gardner, of Queen City, Mo., writes: "You have a heart in the right place. Where would the United States be had it not been for the veterans? Are dollars now more precious than life? I served in Company K, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry."

Capt. C. C. Palmer, of St. James, Mo., writes for a blank petition that all the old boys of '61 want to sign.

Horace G. Odell, writing in the Soldiers' Home, Napa, Cal., says: "I would be only too glad to take the $1 per day and remain out of the Home, for it is a prison to me, and I voice the sentiment of the old boys of this Home and am writing this at their request. The boys that would be benefited by this bill are honest, sober men."

From the headquarters of the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of Idaho comes a letter from Captain Jeanjaquet, of First Colorado Cavalry, in part as follows: "Give us $1 per day and we can live fairly well, and then do away with State Soldiers' Homes altogether, as the present system of conducting some of them is nothing more nor less than a graft and a reward for broken-down politicians. I am very much in favor of your bill and hope sincerely that you will be able to get it through both Houses. It will be more economical both to the United States and State. The $10,000 given the Homes for benefit of the old boys will very nearly give them clothing and board, and it will be better than which they are getting at present."

Lieut. L. B. Church, Company H, Seventeenth Indiana Veterans, writes: "The Sherwood bill will be assisted right and left. Our Congressman will be solicited to meet you and 'push it along.' To me everything looks good, because it is reasonable and a just bill. Many of us are doing hard work striving to get along, hoping that a more substantial appreciation will be given before it's too late."

Maj. L. W. Hainmon, Company D, First Iowa Veteran Volunteers, writing from Topeka, Kans., says: "All that I say will be voiced by every veteran in Kansas. No pension bill ever passed would send such a thrill of delight in the hearts of the old vets as your bill. If your bill is defeated and the old boys turned down in their last hope, there will be hundreds and thousands of votes that will not be cast this year the way they have in the past."

Washington dispatch to Cincinnati Enquirer: "Col. D. W. Wood, of Newark, Ohio, who served throughout the civil war with the Twentieth Ohio Volunteers and is active in Grand Army affairs, is in Washington working aggressively in the interests of the bill recently introduced by Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Toledo, providing for the payment of a pension of a dollar a day to all veterans of the war. Wood is a Republican and SHERWOOD a Democrat, but the Colonel says there should be no politics in pension matters, and consequently has been doing his best to persuade the committees in charge of pension legislation that no more deserving bill was ever offered for their consideration. Thus far he has not encountered much enthusiasm among the lawmakers over it, for they are telling him that the McCumber age pension act, which passed the last Congress, was about all that could be expected in the way of pension legislation for the present. The Colonel is going home to tell the veterans what the prospects are, and widespread agitation in favor of the Sherwood bill may be aroused. The Colonel said to-night:

"The Sherwood bill is the most equitable measure ever introduced in Congress. It recognizes service during the war, while the McCumber law does not. Under the McCumber Act about $12,000,000 a year is being paid out to men who never fired a gun in battle and never saw a Confederate; some even never got farther south than the Ohio River. The veterans are much dissatisfied with it, because it does not discriminate between the men who saw long service and those who saw no service at all. They are complaining about the injustice of it, and if Congress does not pass the Sherwood bill the Republicans will hear from it in the next general election."

General SHERWOOD is receiving hundreds of letters from veterans in Ohio and other States urging him to press his bill for passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon the point of order.

Mr. VREELAND. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to pay voucher in favor of ——— Copenhaver, Washington, D. C., for embossing 2,000 sheets of note paper and 2,000 envelopes, $11.25 from the appropriation for contingent expenses, Navy Department, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, the item is undoubtedly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Do you think it ought to be allowed?

Mr. VREELAND. The committee allowed the item because it was very small, and because the man who did the work had furnished the envelopes to the Department and had not received his pay. I will also say, so that it will become a part of the record, that the order was given for the printing before the chief clerk of the Bureau of Yards and Docks learned of the act passed by Congress, requiring all of the Departments to have their printing done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman answer one question? Does the gentleman think this expense was incurred because of the honest ignorance of some official, or was it incurred with a design to get around the law? I am perfectly willing to forgive honest ignorance, because we all of us possess so much of it.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes; it was because of lack of knowledge of the law. They own up to it, and say that the Comptroller refused it on that account.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation "Transportation, Bureau of Navigation," $135,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the cause of this deficiency? It is a pretty large sum of money for a deficiency.

Mr. VREELAND. I will state in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman that this deficiency is caused entirely by the increase in the number of enlisted men in the Navy. For some reason the public interest in the Navy has been stimulated during the past summer, and the number of enlistments have greatly increased. During the past few years it has been found impossible to get the quota of enlisted men provided by law in the Navy anywhere near up to the figure; but during the past year the number has been increased almost up to the limit. I may say that there has been an average of nearly 6,000 more men in the Navy during the past year than was anticipated by the Department when these appropriations were made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That would increase the size of the Navy, but I do not see how it would increase the cost of transportation.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman will understand that these men have to be brought from the place of enlistment to the training ships, or to whatever other points they are directed to be brought. I may add also for the gentleman's information that the transferring of our fleet to the Pacific coast accounts for a considerable portion of the item, for the reason that these men have to be sent across the continent instead of to nearer points on the Atlantic shore.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much is due to that?

Mr. VREELAND. I am unable to state what part of the difference is due to sending the fleet to San Francisco.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course I can understand that carrying men by railroad would increase the cost of transportation. Now, I understand that this deficit has been caused by transportation by land, plus the increased cost of the fleet going all around the world. But what I want to ask the gentleman is, How in the world could the transportation be increased by reason of this fleet going to the Pacific coast?

Mr. VREELAND. It has nothing to do with the movement of the fleet except that we are sending a very large number of men to California instead of to the Atlantic coast, in order that they may join the fleet—the transportation of men to meet the fleet on the Pacific coast.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, that will explain it.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT.

Purchase of coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, $1,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph, and pending that I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill how this deficiency arises and what the circumstances are.

Mr. VREELAND. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, in his discretion, has sent a large portion of the naval force of the United States, consisting of sixteen battle ships, a flotilla of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers, and other craft—twenty-nine war vessels in all—from the Atlantic coast of the United States to the Pacific coast of the United States, following the coast line of the United States down around South America and up back to San Francisco. These estimates were made by the proper officers of the Navy Department upon the theory that the fleet would remain in the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman means last year.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes; therefore, when the fleet was ordered by the Commander in Chief to proceed to the Pacific coast, large quantities of coal had to be purchased in addition to that estimated for. But, I may say that more than the cost of the coal enters into this deficiency; it is the cost of the transportation added. Instead of transporting it to the Atlantic coast it must be sent across the continent to the Pacific coast, and, I may add also, to ports in the Philippine Islands. Now, this cost amounts to something like $5 per ton for transportation. So the gentleman will see at once that the procuring of this additional amount of coal and transporting it across to the Pacific coast and ports in the Philippine Islands amounts to this large sum of money.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand that the deficiency is mainly for the purchase and transportation of coal for the use of the fleet?

Mr. VREELAND. Almost entirely.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is the committee advised of where the coal was purchased, the bulk of it?

Mr. VREELAND. Most of it on the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And this is to provide for its transportation to the Pacific seaboard.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes; and to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To the Pacific seaboard would be coastwise transportation of coastwise merchandise. Is the committee in possession of information so that they can tell the committee how much of the coal has been transported in foreign and how much in American bottoms?

Mr. VREELAND. My information is that in accordance with the law passed by Congress in 1904, providing that shipment of supplies to the Philippines shall be made in American bottoms unless the cost should be excessive, I understand in pursuance of that law the President fixed 50 per cent, above which he would consider it an excessive amount and would employ foreign instead of American bottoms. I understand in pursuance of this offers of American bottoms appeared only to the amount of 12,000 tons, and therefore the balance of it has been carried in foreign bottoms.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So the balance of 82,000 tons is carried in foreign bottoms?

Mr. VREELAND. Whatever the balance would be; I haven't figured it out.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the committee understand that this coal has been transported or that contracts have been made and the money has been paid for the coal and transportation, or does it exist as a charge against the Government which has not been liquidated?

Mr. VREELAND. The coal has been contracted for and shipped. I am unable to inform the gentleman as to what proportion of it has been actually paid for, but a considerable portion of it has been paid for.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Out of what appropriation?

Mr. VREELAND. Out of the appropriation, I suppose, of $4,151,000, which was made for the last fiscal year.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, this coal, from the statement made by the gentleman, is substantially all coastwise merchandise. I would like to inquire whether the committee took into account in recommending this deficiency the statute passed in 1817, which confined the transportation of coastwise merchandise to the American merchant marine, reading as follows, being an act passed March 1, 1817:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted that no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be imported under penalty of forfeiture thereof from one part of the United States to another part of the United States in a vessel belonging wholly or in part to a subject of any foreign power.

You see that it provides that if so transported the merchandise shall be forfeited. I would like to inquire whether the committee investigated that question or not.

Mr. VREELAND. The committee did not investigate the statute of 1817, if that is what the gentleman refers to.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is substantially the law to-day, with no material change so far as coastwise merchandise is concerned.

Mr. VREELAND. The committee would assume, however, that in the face of a statute passed seventy-five years later, which directs explicitly as to the carrying of supplies for the Army and Navy to the Philippines, and explicitly directs upon what terms they should be carried, that that would supersede the act passed in 1817 so far as it applies to the item under consideration. I say this with great deference to the gentleman whose reputation is so great as a constitutional lawyer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a very nice bouquet from the gentleman. I will say that I have examined the statute of 1904 and it does not have the slightest earthly relation to coastwise transportation or to any statute in relation thereto. It does not relate to it either directly or indirectly, by inference or otherwise. It is simply additional thereto. What I would like to inquire of the committee is, assuming now the legal interests that we have in this controversy to be mutual, whether the committee examined the question as to whether or not this coastwise transportation by foreign vessels was or not in violation of the laws of the United States.

Mr. VREELAND. I am free to say to the gentleman, as I said before, that the committee has given no attention to the act of 1817, and we assumed that the act of 1904, to which I have referred, was ample authority for the action of the executive department of the Government in contracting for the carrying of supplies to the army in the Philippines of whatever nature. The legal advisers of the Executive must also have taken this view.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. I understand that the coal that is transported from the Atlantic to the Pacific, if it is carried by water, is coastwise, and that it is probably carried in American bottoms, but the coal that is carried for consumption to the Philippines is carried under direction of the Executive and largely in foreign bottoms. That is true, is it not?

Mr. VREELAND. I think that is true.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The coal transported between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts is of course coastwise. Of course I know that the statute to-day does not apply the coastwise laws to the Philippines.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand the carrying of the coal for which this deficiency appropriation is being made in foreign bottoms applies only to the carrying of coal between this country and the Philippines, where it may legally be carried in foreign bottoms.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On the contrary, I understand and I know that a very large percentage of the coal transported from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast is being carried and has been carried in foreign bottoms. That is the absolute fact.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That would be in violation of the coastwise laws.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the view I entertain of that situation.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understood the statement of the gentleman from the Committee on Appropriations, there were American bottoms to carry 12,000 tons, and that is all.

Mr. VREELAND. That is all.

Mr. PERKINS. So they had to be carried in foreign bottoms or not at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The fact is there were American bottoms offered for a much larger tonnage than that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me. American bottoms offered to carry 12,000 tons at the price fixed by the Department, but they were willing to have carried more if they would have been paid an outrageously exorbitant price.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That does not affect the legal situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is simply an economic and business proposition. The only question here is whether or not a large portion of this merchandise has been transported in violation of the statute enacted in 1817, which stands to-day substantially as it stood then. I think perhaps I ought to say, to be perfectly fair about this, that the Attorney-General of the United States has held that this statute did not apply to the United States. It is true the statute expressly provides the merchandise shall be forfeited, and the Attorney-General has held that, for reasons sufficient to him, this statute did not apply to the Government, and therefore the Government can transport this class of merchandise in foreign bottoms. I do not agree with the Attorney-General in that conclusion, but I call attention to this appropriation for that reason, and, with the consent of the committee, I would be very glad to extend in the RECORD some observations which I have made upon the legal proposition.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman: If the penalty of forfeiture were enforced against coal owned by the Federal Government carried by foreign bottoms coastwise, who would get it; how would the penalty be enforced?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. By a decree of the court ordering its sale in public market. That is the way it would be enforced.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Where would the fund go?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The fund received might go to the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would be selling our coal and turning the money into our own Treasury.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Surely; that is one of the suggestions made by the Attorney-General.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think the Attorney-General is probably right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not agree with the suggestion of the gentleman. Of course I will not stop to argue the legal proposition. I think the gentleman will find there are plenty of statutes that make things unlawful in connection with which the penalties could not be enforced any more effectively than this particular penalty and some with no penalties at all, but that is by no means conclusive of the legal proposition, although the gentleman has very properly volunteered an ad captandum opinion upon this proposition. It does not follow that because the proceeds of the coal when sold would go to the United States that the enforcement of this statute would not operate as an embarrassment to the Government, as it is the coal and not its proceeds that is important at this time, and they might be compelled to submit to its loss or pay a largely increased price.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just a guess.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just a sort of sidewalk opinion; just a guess.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Maine will permit, I understood the gentleman to say that if the House should agree with him in accepting his legal judgment against that of the Attorney-General it will simply result in forcing the United States Government to pay a great deal more money for the transportation of this coal.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have not any doubt it is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. I wanted to see what great benefit the country would obtain by following the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether that in any way affects the legal construction of the statute?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is all I am discussing.

Mr. SHERLEY. With this difference of opinion between distinguished lawyers——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And with the ignorance the committee possesses, I suggest we might at least take that horn of the dilemma that saves the Government some money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Maine suggest how this Administration could carry out its policy without violating the law?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, that is a thing that is perhaps not up to the "gentleman from Maine," because I did not undertake to defend all of its policies, and I am not advised as to what the gentleman from New York understands those policies to be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As one of the spokesmen for the Administration.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On this proposition I will make a few practical suggestions—right upon this matter now in controversy. The United States Government undertakes to maintain an army, and I submit if the gentleman who had the responsibility for creating and maintaining and administering the affairs of the Army should fail to provide the Army with a supply train, they would probably be scourged from their places of responsibility and power with indignation. We have expended hundreds of millions of money in the building of a navy, and are asked to-day to adopt a policy that will expend $50,000,000 or more in its increase. The expense during the last eight or nine years will aggregate in excess over that expended in the previous eight or nine years nearly one billion of money in creating a great fleet that has not to-day any supply train—that has not the power to support itself anywhere beyond the radius of its operations, which is about 4,000 miles. It can not furnish coal, it can not furnish munitions, it can not furnish supplies beyond that radius; and this Congress has appropriated, as I say, millions to create a fleet without a dollar to create the merchant marine upon which it is based. Here is an exigency that arises, and very happily suggested by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], that when it became necessary in time of profound peace to move this fleet to the Pacific coast—and I do not take any opportunity to criticise that movement, for, so far as I know, it is entirely wise and legitimate—but in a time of profound peace it could not be moved out to that coast without doing what? Calling upon our little merchant marine? It could not be moved without calling upon a foreign merchant marine.

Now, take a time of war, the time for which a fleet is created, and it can not move beyond four or five thousand miles without depending for its supplies upon foreign ships controlled by foreign governments. This Government has no fleet that it has a right to compel the use of for that purpose, and this situation accentuates that condition. And I submit that when we continue to create this enormous fleet at this enormous expense, common ordinary sense should demonstrate that we begin to devote some time and some attention to its absolutely essential foundation—an effective American merchant marine upon which it can rely—a supply train for the Navy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Republican party has been in power, absolute power, in this Government for the past ten years. How does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] explain its failure to remedy this fearful condition that he pictures?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. "The gentleman from Maine" does not modify his suggestions by one iota. They are the facts which I have stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not ask the gentleman to modify his suggestions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will explain it one way. I will give the gentleman this suggestion: Every proposition that has been pending upon this floor during the last eight or nine years looking to reestablishment and rehabilitation of the absolutely essential foundation for millions of expenditure has met with the united opposition of the gentlemen on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.] And with their opposition in committee and on the floor, with their opposition, aided by a minority of this side, we have not succeeded in getting enough Republicans to stand by the essential, fundamental legislation necessary to give the desired results. Those are the facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is referring to the attempt of his party to pass a subsidy bill, and with a majority of fifty-six Members of the last House his party was unable to get sufficient votes to pass such a bill. How can he blame the failure for that upon the minority?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have simply stated the facts as they exist.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has attempted to shift the responsibility from the majority to the minority for the failure to legislate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have stated the exact facts as they exist, and if they bring home responsibility to the other side, let it rest where it belongs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not shift the responsibility to our side. The responsibility for the failure rests with the Republican party.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, who halted in another branch, coordinate with this, the feeble bill to revise this merchant marine—a member of the Republican party? No. I myself heard a representative of the other party start on his noble mission of talking that bill deliberately to death. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, take that responsibility.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not also true that the distinguished gentleman from Maine considered that bill totally inadequate to rehabilifate the merchant marine, and did not he chiefly complain because it neglected to take care of the shipping interests of Maine?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No. The "gentleman from Maine" did consider it adequate. "The gentleman from Maine" considered it a step only in that direction. He voted for it in the committee; he voted for it on the floor. It was not an adequate step; it was simply a feeble effort in that direction, and that feeble effort was strangled by the other side in another branch of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. With great pleasure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the Republican party of this House—and out of it, for all I know—wait until the very last day or two of Congress to pass a subsidy bill, and you passed it so late that only a few hours of the session remained, and any Senator could have talked long enough to talk it to death?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is quite true——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (continuing). Why could you not have passed the bill weeks before the end of the session, so one Senator could not have talked it to death?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It was quite true that this bill went from this House to the other branch under circumstances and at a time when a distinguished Democratic Senator could throttle that legislation by debate, and he did throttle it.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not a Republican Senator talk the river and harbor bill to death that everybody was in favor of except that Senator?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The river and harbor bill has no connection with this matter.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that gentlemen can not refer to proceedings in the Senate in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to include with my remarks the suggestions I made in the letter to the Navy Department in relation to the legality of this expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter above referred to is as follows:

ROCKLAND, ME., October 14, 1907.

Hon. VICTOR H. METCALF,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your very kind note of the 5th, inclosing a copy of the opinion of the Atorney-General and the memorandum relative to American vesels offered for the transportation of coal, at hand, and I am very greatly obliged to you therefor.

I have examined the opinion of the Attorney-General with care and the authorities upon which he relies, and I feel bound to say that I am not able to agree with him in the conclusions he has reached on the statute in question.

Without going over the matter fully, and briefly for the following reasons: First, I do not think he properly applies the common-law rule which he found in Bacon's Abridgment. The whole rule as found in the Abridgment provides in addition to the portion quoted by the Attorney-General, that the general rule is "Where an act of Parliament is made for the public good, for the advancement of religion and justice, or to prevent injury and wrong, the King is bound by such act, though not particularly named therein."

If the act confining the American coastwise trade to American vessels was not enacted "for the public good," I would like to inquire for what purpose it is supposed to have been enacted. If enacted "for the public good" I am at a loss for a reasonable contention against us, as by the express provisions of the common-law maxim upon which the Attorney-General relies in that case the Government "shall be bound by such act, though not particularly named therein." This maxim will be found quoted in the case upon which he relies, United States v. Knight, 14 Peters 315.

The portion of the maxim upon which the Attorney-General relies, in a sense, is an exception, and reads in the case referred to as follows:

"But where a statute is general, and thereby any prerogative, right, title, or interest is divested or taken from the King, in such case he shall not be bound, unless the statute is made by express words to extend to him." Ibid.

Upon what theory the right of the Government to engage in coastwise trade is a "prerogative right, title, or interest"—that is to say, a right, title, or interest enjoyed by a sovereign as distinct from a citizen, a privilege which inheres in the sovereign but does not exist in the citizen of the same degree—I think it would be somewhat difficult to explain. Blackstone says, "By the word 'prerogative' we are to understand the character and power which the sovereign hath over and above all other persons in right of his regal dignity, and which, though part of the common law of the country, is out of its ordinary course." It may be that the United States "hath" or has had "over and above all other persons" a right to engage in the coastwise trade; or that its rights in that regard are distinguishable from and superior to those of an individual citizen out of the "ordinary course" of the law, but if that be true it is safe to say that the Attorney-General is entitled to the credit of discovering and for the first time asserting this convenient feature of "regal dignity."

While it may be true that this rule in relation to "the public good" and "prerogative right, title, or interest" has undoubtedly been adopted by the United States, the cases relied upon by the Attorney-General, in my opinion, are not especially happy for the purpose of sustaining his present contention.

In the case of United States v. Knight, 14 Peters, 301, while it is true that the court stated the maxim which I have quoted in full, but which was only quoted in part by the Attorney-General, it is to be observed that in that case the court held that in a statute which did not refer to the Government in express terms, but which did impair its rights and privileges, inasmuch as it increased the rights and privileges of the debtor in question, did apply to the United States, although it was not mentioned in the statute. The court says, "We shall best carry into effect the legislative intent by construing the executions at the suit of the United States to be embraced within the act of 1828" (14 Peters, 314), although the United States were not expressly or indirectly even mentioned in the act of 1828, so that one case upon which the Attorney-General relies held that the United States was covered by the statute in question, although not mentioned therein.

In the case of United States v. Herron (20 Wall., 251) the court quoted the maxim above referred to, giving both the affirmative and negative portion thereof as I have given them above, and predicated their opinion upon two propositions. First, because the United States was not named in any provisions of the bankruptcy act (question being whether they were bound by the provisions of the bankruptcy act and the debt due the United States was discharged thereby), and second, "That many of the provisions describing the rights, duties and obligations of creditors are in their nature inapplicable to the United States, and that if held to include the United States, could not fail to become a constant and irremediable source of public inconvenience and embarrassment." "Viewed in the light of these suggestions," the court said, "and of the language employed in the act, the court is of the opinion that the words 'creditor or creditors,' as used in the several provisions of the bankruptcy act, do not include the United States." Note the significance of the second reason given in the summary by the court in the expression "of the language employed in the act." The court had occupied several pages in the opinion in detailing the provisions of the act for the purpose of demonstrating the inapplicability of its provisions to the United States. They were evidently not satisfied with the old common-law maxims and felt it necessary to reenforce their conclusions by the provisions of the act itself, although they refer to the list of authorities which proceeded upon the common-law ground that the United States was not expressly mentioned in the act.

Moreover, these decisions relating to the bankruptcy law and insolvency law and the statute of limitations are nearly all of them in the last analysis banked upon old English cases adopting similar construction under these circumstances. These cases under these circumstances are by no means sufficient to demonstrate that the act in question was not "made for the public good," and that under such circumstances the Government is not "bound by such act though not particularly named therein." The suggestion of the Attorney-General that the provisions of the act in question can not apply to property owned by the Government, because a proceeding for forfeiture would "be nugatory and futile," seems to me to proceed upon a very fundamental misconception of the character of the statute he was construing. The Attorney-General seems to proceed upon the theory that all there is of that statute is the penalty. On the contrary, the statute consists of a prohibition and a penalty. The prohibition is "That no merchandise shall be transported by water * * * in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States." The penalty is "forfeiture thereof." The Attorney-General seems to be under the impression that because the Government has ingeniously created a condition by purchasing coal in one American port for transportation to another, and thus made the application of the penalty inconsistent or ineffective or, as he says, "nugatory," that the Government has thus succeeded by indirection in avoiding the prohibition.

I do not believe any court would hold that it was thus within the power of the Government to render a proper piece of legislation inoperative. It is too obvious for discussion that the transportation of the coal from one American port to another and then its purchase by the Government would be clearly within the provisions of the act so far as the transportation is concerned. This the Government understands, and now the proposition is that the Government can avoid or eliminate this statute and break down a law specifically enacted "for the public good" by simply becoming the owner of the property which becomes the subject of such transportation, and thus suspend the operation of the coastwise laws in the face of a direct and explicit prohibitory provision.

This may satisfy the Department and the Attorney-General, but I do not believe that any court would ever tolerate such an evasion of the statute. While the penalty may be ineffective, what warrant of law is there for holding that because that condition has been directly created by the Government, thus relieving itself of the penalty feature of the statute, that it is not violating the law in letter and spirit, although on account of such an unforseen and unexpected condition, and therefore unprovided for, it succeeds in avoiding the penalty?

Even if the Government has succeeded by its operation in rendering the penalty nugatory or ineffective, this does not demonstrate by any means that the acts are not still prohibited by law and within the scope of the statute. It will not be difficult to find numerous instances in the statutes of the United States where things are prohibited to be done and if done would, therefore, be in clear violation of law to which violation no penalty is attached. Such statutes consist simply of a prohibition without any penalty attached thereto, so that a prohibition without a penalty is by no means unusual.

Would the Attorney-General contend that if this was simply a prohibition without a penalty that for that reason the Government could properly violate the law? If, like the two preceding sections of the original act of 1817, the penalty was forfeiture of both vessel and cargo, would it be claimed that because the Government could evade the penalty of forfeiture of the cargo by indirection it would by that act give the vessel owner immunity also and make it lawful for a foreign vessel against the express prohibition of a statute to transport coastwise merchandise, simply because of the incongruity involved in enforcing a separate and distinct penalty? It should be borne in mind that the act of unlawfully transporting the cargo does not operate to transfer the property therein to the Government, although forfeiture is the penalty. The actual forfeiture of the cargo is a judicial act over which the Executive has no control. The disposition of the forfeited cargo after the forfeiture has been judicially determined is entirely for the court. Until this determination is made the title remains in the original owner. Although the cargo may happen to be the property of the Government, acquired in the exercise of its executive capacity, it by no means follows that the judicial branch does not have the power to make such an order, with reference to such a cargo, as would not only embarrass, but would effectively penalize the Government for the action of the officers of one of its departments in deliberately violating the law. The court is not confined in the exercise of its discretion to vesting the title to the property forfeited in the Government. It is only such a decree that would seem to be anomalous or "nugatory."

I should doubt if in practice such a decree is ever made. The usual course, no doubt, is to order its sale, the proceeds to be turned over to the Government in whole or in part (in part in case the law as to informers applies). Circumstances can be conceived under which the court's order might be very far from "nugatory" so far as the Government is concerned. I do not suppose that anyone will contend that the Navy Department is not clearly within the spirit and policy of this act. It was enacted in pursuance of a policy up to that time vigorously and consistently followed of aiding and maintaining our merchant marine.

It gave to this marine for its benefit the monopoly of our coastwise trade. A probable result was to increase the rates of freight.

This burden would, in the first instance, be borne by the individual shipper. A fortiori then this burden should be borne, not only by the aggregate of all the shippers, but of all the people, the Government itself, for the same purpose to accomplish the same end. You will, of course, see that I have not attempted an exhaustive discussion of this important question, either upon authority or reason, but have only called your attention to some of the most obvious considerations involved in a proper construction of the act.

In conclusion, please allow me to say that I regret very much that the Department has not felt bound, in so far as it may have been in doubt, to resolve it in favor of the development of our own marine, without the development of which on an adequate scale the present condition demonstrates that the enormous sums that have been expended in creating a Navy are likely to prove to have been improvidently expended, as we have provided for no sufficient cargo-carrying marine whose services we have a right to compel in a time of real exigency to keep the Navy supplied with coal, munitions of war, and other supplies wherever it may have occasion to go. A battle ship without coal is little better than a "painted ship on a painted ocean."

I am, yours, very respectfully,

C. E. LITTLEFIELD.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the matter before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 22, lines 18 to 22. There is no motion pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move to strike out the last word.

The paragraph now under consideration suggests one or two important matters for the consideration of the House. I think it well that the House should know and the country should know that this deficiency of $1,000,000 is caused by sending the fleet to the Pacific coast. What reason there may have been sending it there I do not know and I shall not discuss, further than to say that it has caused this deficiency and will cause other deficiencies. But the particular thing that I wish to call to your attention is this: We are transporting coal from the Atlantic ports, around South America to Pacific ports and to the Philippine Islands, at an enormous expense to the Government. Two or three years ago somebody—and I do not know who that somebody was—had influence enough to bring before Congress for consideration a proposition to buy coal lands in the Philippine Islands. Congress entertained the proposition favorably, and the property was purchased. We were told when that proposition was before this House that there was an abundance of coal of a superior quality. We were told that if the Government owned these coal lands it would be an economy; it would save us large sums of money in transporting coal from the United States to the Philippine Islands. Congress authorized the purchase of the land, somebody got the money, and we got a gold brick. When the authorities of the Navy Department appeared before the committee asking for this deficiency appropriation, and the question was asked, "What about the coal lands in the Philippine Islands?" the committee was informed that none of the coal had ever been mined and that it was unfit for the uses of the Navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who said that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The officer of the Navy who appeared before the committee. I do not know who brought that bill before Congress, but I do think that the people who were able to secure the passage of the bill for purchase of the coal lands in the Philippine Islands ought to tell this House why these lands have not been used and how it came that the people were buncoed. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. TAWNEY. Inasmuch as the gentleman is looking over at this side of the House, I desire before he takes his seat to say that he can not fasten upon myself any responsibility for the purchase of that alleged coal island or island of coal, for I think both sides of the House divided on the proposition. I know that I was very much opposed to it, and defeated it once in the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can generally follow with great pleasure the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] upon a business proposition. He deserves the thanks of the House for the investigation that he tries to make and does make into all these matters. I am delighted to be able to follow him.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the remarks made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] are most pertinent to the consideration of this paragraph on the deficiency bill.

It is true that it is a disgrace to America that she should spend the sums she does spend in the building up of a great navy, and should not have a merchant marine sufficient to supply simply colliers to aid that navy when it moves from the shores of the country that has created it. I am in entire accord with the gentleman as to the disgraceful condition of affairs, but I differ with him as to the cause and the remedy. He can not afford to excuse himself or his party for this condition. The very principle upon which his party is founded is more responsible for it than anything else. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have built your tariff wall so that your merchant marine could not live. You have forced it to buy in a closed market, when what it sells, to wit, transportation, must be sold in an open market, and then you come here deploring the failure of this marine to grow, and you throw to us the statement that we have opposed your subsidy measure. We have opposed it, and I, for my part, should not want to mitigate in the slightest that opposition. I glory in it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am glad that the ship subsidy bill was talked to death. I would have been more glad if this House had maintained its position of opposition to it, and had not been whipped by the leaders of your party into supporting a bill that they did not believe in, so that it would not have had to be talked to death.

Now, when you come with a bill that does not carry with it this fundamental economic error that a business which is now unprofitable shall be made profitable, not by changing the conditions under which it lives, but by paying the losses, we will agree to help you pass such bill to create a real merchant marine; but when you ask us not to change the conditions that have throttled your marine, but ask us simply to put into the pockets of a limited number of shipowners enough money to make them run profitably a business that is economically being run on a wrong basis, you can not expect us to support it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I make an inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When the gentleman makes a suggestion that the merchant marine is compelled to buy abroad under the conditions to which he refers, am I to understand that he refers to the material that goes into the construction of the ships, that being the element that increases their cost?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is one of the elements.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I be allowed to state to the gentleman, first, that this great question of the development of the merchant marine applies altogether to the foreign trade, because we now have the greatest coastwise marine of any country in the world.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; so great that when it makes a bid to carry coal for the Government it wants twice as much as the foreign ships.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is quite true; but will the gentleman bear this in mind also, that there are foreign ships steaming on the water that now have a subsidy simply for traveling over space, without reference to the carriage of merchandise therein——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman finish his question and not make a speech——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Coastwise trade is obliged to compete in this business with vessels that thus are subsidized.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope the gentleman's question will be shorter than the preface. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly; but is the gentleman aware of the fact that for all vessels engaged in foreign trade they are able to purchase all of the material of which they are constructed abroad free of duty?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am aware of that, and aware of how that proposition and argument that the gentleman undertakes to convey was exploited. Now, the gentleman knows, because he comes from a maritime country, that no man is going to build a ship, even for the foreign trade, without knowing that conditions may arise when he will want to put it in the coastwise trade, and no man can take advantage of the rebate on material bought abroad except he keep his ship permanently in the foreign trade; he could not bring it into the coastwise trade. The gentleman from Maine knows from the experiment tried by a man living in his own country that the supposed benefit is no benefit because of the restriction it puts on the activity of the ship built of foreign material.

No man is going to put his money into a ship intended for the foreign trade when if circumstances arise he can not bring that ship into the coastwise trade. The gentleman knows that that is a fact and knows that shipbuilders have so testified.

Now, I am not going to make a speech on ship subsidy, but I want the gentleman to understand and the country to understand that when his party claims the wondrous benefits of the protective tariff it must stand for the injuries that come from that tariff, and one of the greatest has been the destruction of the merchant marine, and the ingenuity of men on that side has not been sufficient to propose a remedy that would re-create a merchant marine that did not strike directly at your protective tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky would have the same confidence in the assertion he has made when his attention is called to the fact that the American marine has shrunk faster under free-trade legislation than it has under legislation for a protective tariff.

Mr. SHERLEY. I doubt the accuracy of that statement, and if it be true, it will be found to be not because of the legislation, but for other reasons. The gentleman smiles, but during the time when we had relative free-trade conditions in this country the ship was passing from sail to steam, from wood to iron, and there were many reasons that might affect temporarily the condition of the merchant marine. The gentleman must confess, if he will be candid, that the present tariff adds a great burden to the merchant marine and does not favor in any way the American ships in competition with foreign ships.

The gentleman talks about subsidized tramp steamers of other countries and gives that as a reason why they are willing to carry cargoes cheaper than the coastwise vessels with American bottoms. The gentleman also knows that the great tramp ships of the world are not subsidized, and that some of the greatest companies in Germany do not owe a dollar of their prosperity to Government aid.

And the gentleman ought also to know that under the greatest protection ever given to a coastwise system, a protection that absolutely prohibits any foreign vessel going in the trade, the American coastwise vessels, having a monopoly, are maintaining a false price for what they have to sell, namely, the carrying of products, and they were not willing to bid with the Government fairly, because, having a monopoly, they could make more money out of the extortion of individuals. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would just make this statement in reply to the last suggestion of the gentleman, which I do not think he really intends seriously to make, that the people engaged in coastwise trade increase the price for the purpose of extorting money from the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I did not say that, but I do say this, that they are getting such false prices under the protection they enjoy that they could not afford to divert their ships from this unusual and unduly remunerative market that our legislation has created into carrying for the Government, and I do say that they did ask a price that was exorbitant in the light of what other ships of other nations were willing to do the work for.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say this, taking into account the cost of construction of the American merchant marine, its excess over the cost abroad, and the cost of operation, involving the maintenance and support of the sailors on the scale that we provide and the rate of wages paid, that the coastwise men in this exigency made a proposition to the Department to carry as cheaply as they could carry and get a fair return on the capital invested and pay the wages they were compelled to pay to their crews under these circumstances.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand one of the handicaps that the American ocean-carrying trade labors under is the high price of wages prevailing in this country.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That as long as men can make remunerative wages on land, of course they will not take lower wages on sea.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman said a moment ago that he thought perhaps under the free-trade policy the merchant marine faded away, vanished out of existence, as rapidly as under the protective system. I want to suggest this thought to the gentleman: My observation has been and my acquaintance with the industrial history of this country is that under free-trade periods wages are exceedingly low, and it might from that hypothesis possibly enable our merchant steamers to compete with foreigners in the point of wages—the reduction of wages under the free-trade system.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So far as that fact is concerned, of course that would contribute to that result.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I think that is the remedy——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the remedy my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] had in his mind.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the remedy the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] had in mind, that a continued Democratic administration might possibly so affect the affairs of this Government that labor would be so cheap and abundant here that it would be glad to go to the sea or any other place for employment at most any kind of wages. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I will suggest to him that we do not have to wait for that Democratic administration, because that condition of cheap labor and of men hunting for jobs exists right now under a Republican Administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to correct the statement that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] made a few moments ago, to wit, that our shipbuilding died down under low, or Democratic tariffs—"free-trade tariffs," I believe he stated. I want to give him a few figures to show how utterly incorrect that statement is, and then we will pass along. I read from Henry Loomis Nelson, who was the secretary to Speaker John G. Carlisle. Mr. Nelson wrote a book on this subject in 1884.

From that I quote as follows: "That during the fiscal year (1850) our foreign trade"—that is, Mr. Chairman, under the low-tariff act of 1846—"amounted to $687,372,176 and was $45,000,000 greater than ever before;" "we built," says he, "2,265 ships and barks between 1850 and 1860," under a low tariff, "and only 800 during the next decade," which, Mr. Chairman, was under a high tariff, "and only 608 between 1870 and 1880," which was under a high protective tariff. "Then," says he, "our tonnage engaged in all trades, coastwise as well as foreign, was over 5,353,868 tons; now, after the expiration of twenty years, it was 4,068,035 tons." So the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is entirely mistaken in his facts. But I will not stop with Mr. Nelson. I will quote next from David A. Wells.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion right there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman would take pains in his investigation of his subject——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I have.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, certainly; but I was going to suggest that if he would extend the investigation over a longer period of time, beginning in 1789, and bringing it up to date——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I have extended it long enough to prove my point. What more do I want? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Only the gentleman when he finds what he wants stops.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I found what I wanted, and I also found what you did not want. Wait a minute; there is lots of it here.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman give it from 1789 to——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am satisfied the gentleman will be fair enough to admit I am correct and that he is not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I was going to suggest this point to the gentleman: Will he not give, in order to have intelligent information on this question——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is exactly what I am going to do if the gentleman will give me a chance.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I regret very much for a moment to stop the acquisition of important information by the gentleman. I regret that very much in regard to any question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I said I regretted to retard the gentleman's progress in the acquisition of information on any subject.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the most mutual feeling. Wait a minute, let me give the facts and then we will discuss them. I will then yield to the gentleman. I am taking this, now, from David A. Wells, a Republican. Mr. Wells says, in defending the low tariff act of 1846 to 1860, this: "Exports and imports: In 1840, $239,000,000; 1845, $231,000,000." That was under a high tariff, Mr. Chairman. "In 1850, $330,000,000; in 1855, $536,000,000; in 1860, $762,000,000." All three years under a low tariff. We increased that much in a few years under a low tariff.

Now, on the subject of shipbuilding Mr. Wells says: "Increase in shipbuilding: In 1840, 129,084 tons; in 1845, 146,018 tons; in 1850 (under a Democratic tariff), 272,219 tons; in 1855 (under a low Democratic tariff), 583,450 tons." And yet the distinguished gentleman states that under a Democratic, under a people's tariff, under an antitrust tariff, under an antimonopoly tariff, under a Democratic tariff, that Mr. Blaine said gave us "abundant revenue" and a "flourishing condition," he, the gentleman from Maine, says that our shipbuilding died away. Since that time the kind of monsters denounced in the Littlefield antitrust bill have risen, and the gentleman knows it; and the gentleman has seen the great shipbuilding institutions of this country, in his own section, die down under a protective tariff; and why? Are people going to build ships——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman tell us what the exports and imports are now under the present tariff?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, the gentleman who has reported this appropriation says the revenues are falling off.

Mr. PAYNE. I am asking about the exports and imports.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can not; I know here is the great Republican party——

Mr. PAYNE. I commend this to the gentleman, to extend his studies from 1860——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform the country how your revenue has fallen off? Will the gentleman also tell us why prior to a gold standard and Republican Administration we did not have panics, paupers, and have Coxey's armies——

Mr. PAYNE. I will tell you all about it some day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell you there has been one Coxey's army all over this country——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Shipbuilding has died away and soup buildings have sprung up in lieu thereof. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not only upon the land, but upon the seas. Coxey's armies spring up because of the oppressive laws you have imposed upon the people. Your party has taken from the widows and orphans their insurance money to corrupt the ballot of this country, to continue the Republican party in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under Republican Administrations not only shipbuilding has closed down, but the banks, loaded with the people's money, have been shut down, and shut down because of the wrongdoing in New York State, that has been under the control of a Republican governor so long that I have forgotten when that great misfortune befell that unfortunate people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Yes, Coxey armies, Mr. Chairman, have started; Jones's armies have started, Smith armies have started, and Brown's armies have started; and I tell you, my fellow-citizens, these great armies will continue to start until William J. Bryan rectifies conditions from the great White House at the other end of the avenue. [Applause on Democratic side.] Ah, gentlemen, I read a few days ago that away out in the great State of Washington 2,200 idle people were going to march into Seattle to get something to eat and something to wear. Then there are 65,000 people, I understand, in the great Republican State of New York who can not pay their rent, and are being turned out in the cold and snow. The city can not get enough money for a scavenger force to shovel the snow. They even let the poor beggar walk around in the snow up to his knees, asking for food and raiment, under a Republican Administration.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, if I desired to take up the time of the committee, I could read from the Speaker's own great speech in this House. I have it here, but I will not take up your time to read it. You know what he said when he was on the floor. He condemned ship subsidies as an act of insanity; and yet, Mr. Chairman, for some reason or other the Speaker slipped his bridle, broke his kicking strap, and let that monster subsidy bill into the House a few hours before the Fifty-ninth Congress died. You rushed it through here. You could drive a white elephant, as we say, through here, but the Democrats will be, as they were, on guard. Then you sent it over to the Senate, and, by the eternal, there it was caught by the throat and choked to death by that great Democrat from Tennessee, Edward Ward Carmack, whom we all loved and respected. [Applause on Democratic side.] Ah, Mr. Chairman, thank God there is always a lot of patriotic and honest Republicans on that side, that have come to us and helped the Democrats to save the American Treasury.

They say there is a deficit—almost—in the Treasury. Suppose this subsidy bill had passed, gentlemen. Suppose the Democrats had "laid down" and let that three or four million dollar bill become law? Do you not see how we saved the Treasury from its friends—so called? Here you are cutting down expenses and everything else. If you had forced this subsidy on the Treasury, where in the name of God would you be to-day, gentlemen? Where would the American people be, who want their war claims and their pension claims paid, and you up here helping some great, big, fat, willapus-wallapus, to wit, the ship subsidy combination, rob the Treasury? [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in extending my remarks, I insert from the last Democratic campaign book—which I, in a great measure, prepared—the following:

TARIFF 1846—MR. BLAINE.

Moreover, the tariff of 1846 was yielding an abundant revenue, and the business of the country was in a flourishing condition at the time his Administration [President Pierce's] was organized. Money became very abundant after the year 1849; large enterprises were undertaken, speculation was prevalent, and for a considerable period the prosperity of the country was general and apparently genuine.

TARIFF 1857—RESISTANCE CEASED TO LOW TARIFF.

The principles embodied in the tariff of 1856 seemed for the time to be so entirely vindicated and approved that resistance to it ceased, not only among the people, but among the protective economists, and even among the manufacturers, to a large extent.

So general was this acquiescence that in 1856 a protective tariff was not suggested, or even hinted, by any one of the three parties which presented Presidential candidates.

"By this law (tariff, 1857) the duties were placed lower than they had been at any time since the war of 1812.

"The act was well received by the people, and was, indeed, concurred in by a considerable portion of the Republican party."

The convention (which nominated Mr. Lincoln, 1860) therefore avoided the use of the word "protection," and was contented with the moderate declaration that "sound public policy" requires such an adjustment of imports as will encourage the development of the industrial interest of the whole country.

We will now quote from the very able report of Special Commissioner of Revenue David A. Wells, Executive Document No. 16, House, Fortieth Congress, third session, dated January, 1869, first classifying our tariffs as follows: 1816 to 1824, moderate protective; 1824 to 1832, high protective; 1833 to 1842, lower compromise; 1842 to 1848, higher protective; 1846 to 1857, low revenue; 1857 to 1861, lower revenue.

Mr. Wells said:

"Production of pig iron in 1830, 165,000 tons; in 1840, 347,000 tons; increase in fourteen years, 110 per cent.

"Production in 1845, 486,000 tons; increase in five years, 40 per cent.

"Production in 1850, 564,000 tons; increase in ten years, 62 per cent.

"Production in 1855, 754,000 tons; increase in five years, 33 per cent.

"Production in 1860, 913,000 tons; increase in ten years, 61 per cent.

"It thus appears that the great annual increase in the production of pig iron took place prior to the year 1840, and for thirty years was remarkably uniform at the rate of 10 to 11 per cent per annum; and that since then, no matter what has been the character of the legislation, whether the tariff was low or high, whether the condition of the country was one of war or peace, the increase of the production has been at the average of about 8 per cent per annum, or more than double the ratio of the increase of population.

"Again, as another curious illustration of an apparent misconception of the effects of past legislation upon the development of the country, take the following paragraph from the recent report of a Congressional committee:

"'No business man of mature age need be reminded of the revulsion which followed in consequence of the free-trade system of 1846—the decline of production, of immigration, of wages, of public or private revenue—until the culmination of the system in the tariff of 1857, with the memorable crisis of that period; the general run of manufacturers and merchants; the suspended payment of the banks; the reduction of the Treasury to the verge of bankruptcy, and the unparalleled distress among the unemployed poor.'

"Now, with all due deference to the committee, the Commissioner would ask attention to the following statistics bearing on the question under consideration:

"Increase in the production of pig iron: In 1840, 347,000 tons; in 1845, 486,000; in 1850, 564,755; 1855, 754,178; 1860, 913,770.

"Increase in the production of Pennsylvania anthracite coal: 1842, 1,108,418 tons; 1846, 2,344,005; 1847, 2,882,309; 1849, 3,217,641; 1855, 6,486,097; 1860, 8,143,938.

"Increase in the domestic consumption of cotton north of the Potomac: 1840, 297,000 bales; 1845, 422,000; 1849–50, 476,000; 1851–52, 588,000; 1855, 633,000; 1858–59, 760,000; 1859–60, 792,000.

"Increase in immigration: 1840, 84,000; 1845, 174,000; 1850, 310,000; 1854, 427,000.

"Increase in public revenues: 1840, $19,000,000; 1845, $29,000,000; 1850, $52,000,000; 1855, $74,000,000.

"Increase of national wealth: From 1840 to 1850, 80 per cent; from 1850 to 1860, 126 per cent. In 1854 the 6 per cent bonds of the United States, issued in 1848, commanded a premium of 21 per cent.

"Commercial tonnage of the United States: 1840, 2,180,000; 1850, 3,535,000; 1860, 5,353,000.

"Exports and imports: In 1840, $239,000,000; 1845, $231,000,000; 1850, $330,000,000; 1855, $536,000,000; 1860, $762,000,000.

"Increase in shipbuilding: 1842, 129,084 tons; 1845, 146,018; 1850, 272,219; 1855, 583,450.

"Annual increase of railroad construction: 1842, 491 miles; 1845, 256; 1847, 669; 1849, 1,369; 1853, 2,452; 1856, 3,643 miles."

ANOTHER REPUBLICAN STATESMAN.

Mr. Garfield in the House, April 1, 1870 (App. Globe, pp. 271–2), in urging tariff reform, in part, said:

FIRST FURNACE TO REDUCE ORE ERECTED IN 1846.

"I believe that the first furnace in the United States which reduced ore with raw bituminous coal was established in Mahoning County, Ohio, in 1846. From that time, year by year, with some interruption, there has been an increase in the number of furnaces. In the year 1856, the Lake Superior ore was brought down to the Ohio coal region, and now there come down the Northern Lakes, as has been shown by the gentleman from Michigan, about 500,000 tons per annum of Lake Superior ore; and more than one-fourth of the whole amount is every year consumed in two counties of my Congressional district."

In the same speech, page 272, he states that—

"The tariff act of 1842 was adopted, by which the rate of duty was raised and fixed at an average of 33 per cent.

"In 1845, the Free Trade Party having again come into power, a heavy reduction of the tariff was made in 1846, and the rate pushed down to an average of 24½ per cent."

He further states:

"That the tariff act of 1847," enacted by all political parties, "reduced the rate of duty to 24½ per cent, a lower rate than it had reached in forty years. * * *

"In the year 1861 marked a new era in the history of the tariff. In the winter of 1860–61 the rates were again raised. From the 2d of March, 1861, to the present time (1870) there had been thirteen separate tariff acts and revolutions, all of which have more or less increased the rate of duty, and it now averages about 47½ per cent on dutiable articles and 41 per cent on all our imports, both dutiable and free."

REASON FOR ABANDONING THE VERY LOW TARIFF OF 1857 AND RAISING THE RATES.

"That these acts were made necessary by the war few will venture to deny. It is also undeniable that the heavy internal taxes imposed upon the manufacturing industries neutralized the effect of protective duties and made an increase of the tariff necessary as a measure of compensating protection.

"But, as I have already shown, the heaviest burdens of internal taxes have been removed from manufacturers and a demand that some corresponding reduction in the tariff rate shall be made is coming up from all quarters of the country. The signs are unmistakable that a strong reaction is setting in against the prevailing rates, and he is not a wise legislator who shuts his eyes to the fact of the situation."

GARFIELD FOR ULTIMATE FREE TRADE.

In concluding his speech he quoted from a former address in this House in 1866, in which he said:

"I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade. I am for that free trade which can only be achieved through a reasonable protection."

Mr. Henry Loomis Nelson was secretary to the Hon. John G. Carlisle while Speaker of the House. On July 4, 1884, Mr. Carlisle addressed him a letter, in part saying this:

"Learning that you have prepared and propose to publish a volume containing a condensed statement of the arguments in opposition to the protective system in favor of a revenue tariff, I desire to say," etc., commending Mr. Nelson for his undertaking. By far his is the most complete presentation of the operations of the low tariff of 1846 and 1857, which is herewith, in part, presented:

WHAT A LOW TARIFF DID FOR THE COUNTRY.

Between 1846 and 1860 the country had a low tariff. Under the law of 1846 the average duty was about 25 per cent, and under the act of 1857 it was about 20 per cent. There was never a period of greater prosperity in the history of the country.

In 1850 the cash value of the farms was $3,271,575,426, and in 1860 it was $6,645,045,057, an increase of 103 per cent. In 1870 the value of farms was $9,262,858,861 in currency, an increase of only 3 per cent over the gold valuations of 1860. In 1880 the value of farms was $10,197,096,766, an increase of a little more than 10 per cent over the valuations of 1870. From 1850 to 1860 the value of farming implements increased 63.50 per cent. In the next decade the increase was only 36 per cent in currency, while from 1870 to 1880 the increase was only 20.66 per cent.

SOME NOTABLE COMPARISONS.

From 1830 to 1840 the aggregate of real and personal property increased 40 per cent; from 1840 to 1850, 37 per cent. In 1850 this aggregate value was $7,135,780,228; in 1860 it was $16,159,616,068, an increase of 126 per cent. In 1870 the aggregate value was $30,068,518,507 in currency, being an apparent increase of a little more than 85 per cent. In 1860 the total State and local taxation was $94,186,746, but in 1870 it had reached the enormous sum of $280,591,521, an increase of 198 per cent, although the value of property had increased only 85 per cent. An examination of the report of the Superintendent of the Census for 1870 shows that the increase in the value of real and personal property from 1850 to 1860 was more than 184 per cent, instead of 126 per cent, and that instead of an increase of 85 per cent from 1860 to 1870 there was an actual decrease of more than 3 per cent. This arises from what the Superintendent says was an undervaluation of property in 1860 by carelessness of from 20 to 80 per cent, while the nominal valuation of property was increased in 1870 from 30 to 40 per cent through the effects of currency inflation and other causes. Making the necessary allowances for these sums, we have $20,199,520,085 as the proper valuation for 1860 and $19,544,537,030 as the true valuation for 1870. If our wealth had increased from 1860 to 1880 at the same rate that it did from 1850 to 1860, it would have reached, in 1880, $83,000,000,000, instead of $43,500,000,000.

LOW TARIFF INCREASES MANUFACTURING.

There was some wonderful increases in our manufacturing and mechanical industries. In 1850 the total value of the products of mechanical and manufacturing industries was $1,019,106,616; in 1860 it was $1,885,861,676, an increase of 87 per cent, although the population of the country had increased only 35.50 per cent. From 1860 to 1870 the actual increase was only 52 per cent.

PRODUCTION OF COAL INCREASED.

The increase in the production of coal, which, according to the protection leaders, indicates better than any other single branch of industry the progress of all manufacturing enterprises, was very wonderful between 1850 and 1860. The following table shows the increase:

	Per cent.
Gain in number of mines	22.30
Gain in value of yearly products	182.00
Gain in value of material used	1,017.00
Gain in amount paid as wages	137.00
Gain in number of hands employed	143.33
Gain in amount of capital invested	253.00

COAL OUTPUT IN PENNSYLVANIA INCREASED.

In Pennsylvania the capital invested in the production of coal was 331 per cent greater in 1860 than in 1850, and the value of the coal product increased 179.90 per cent. In Maryland the increase was nearly 137 per cent, in Ohio nearly 127 per cent, in Indiana nearly 652 per cent, in Illinois it was 1,708 per cent, in Iowa it was 2,204 per cent, in Kentucky it was 200 per cent, and in Alabama nearly 237 per cent.

HIGH TARIFF KILLED SHIPBUILDING.

During the fiscal year our foreign trade amounted to $687,372,176, which was $45,000,000 greater than ever before. We built 2,265 ships and barks between 1850 and 1860, and only 800 during the next decade, and only 608 between 1870 and 1880. Then our tonnage engaged in all trades, coasting as well as foreign, was 5,353,868 tons; now, after the expiration of twenty years, it is 4,068,035 tons.

REVENUE TARIFF PROMOTES INTELLECTUAL CONDITIONS.

The social and intellectual condition of the people kept pace with the material progress. Schools, churches, and libraries flourished. The products of the printing establishments of the United States increased during the same time 143 per cent. Wonderful as this is, it does not tell the story of the prosperity and growth of the preceding decade under a revenue tariff. Then the products of the printing houses increased 168 per cent, while the capital invested increased 235 per cent. In New England the increased product was more than 96 per cent, and in the Middle States 139 per cent. Pennsylvania increased her product 250 per cent, New Jersey 322 per cent. In the 11 Western States and Territories the increase was 572 per cent. The State of New York increased 104.60 per cent, and actually turned out more than the whole country produced in 1850.

POST-OFFICES INCREASED.

In 1850 we had 18,417 post-offices and 178,672 miles of post routes, but in 1860 we had 28,498 post-offices and 245,594 miles of post routes, an increase of 55 per cent in the number of offices and 35 per cent in the miles of routes. In 1880, twenty years later, we had 42,989 post-offices and 343,888 miles of post-roads, being an increase since 1860 of only 50 per cent in one and 42.50 in the other.

MANUFACTURE OF PAPER INCREASED.

In the manufacture of paper the United States increased the value of its product 106.50 per cent from 1860 to 1870, while the capital invested increased 126.50 per cent, but from 1850 to 1860 the value of the product increased more than 108 per cent and the capital invested nearly 180 per cent. The increase in the number of hands employed was 73.50 per cent, and in the total amount of wages paid 89 per cent. Pennsylvania alone increased her product 128 per cent.

HOW RAILROAD BUILDING FLOURISHED.

Up to the year 1850 we had constructed only 9,021 miles of railroad in this country, but at the close of 1860 we had 30,635 miles, being an increase of 239.5 per cent in ten years. At the close of the year 1870 we had 52,914 miles, being an increase of a little more than 72 per cent over 1860, notwithstanding the Government had since 1860 granted millions of acres of public lands and issued its own bonds to the amount of millions of dollars to various railroad companies to aid in the construction of their lines. In 1880 we had 88,237 miles, an increase of 66.66 per cent during the decade.

LABOR AND WAGES INCREASED.

The value of the output of our woolen mills from 1850 to 1860 increased nearly 42.5 per cent, while from 1870 to 1880 it increased only 22.57 per cent. The number of hands employed increased 18.5 per cent, and the total wages increased 36.8 per cent. In New England the product of the woolen mills increased 62 per cent; the increase in Rhode Island being 176 per cent; Massachusetts, 53.7 per cent; New Jersey, 21.57 per cent; Vermont, 61.39 per cent; Maine, 83.46 per cent.

CARPET MANUFACTURING INCREASED.

The value of the carpet manufactures increased 45.40 per cent. The increase in the number of hands employed was 8 per cent and in wages paid nearly 24 per cent. The compensation of each hand was 15 per cent more in 1860 than in 1850. In the Middle States the value of the product increased 80.90 per cent; in Maine, 47.30; Massachusetts, 44.80; New York, 32.90; Pennsylvania, 138; Ohio, 208.

The product of the manufacturers of hosiery increased 608 per cent. The Eastern States increased 481 per cent; Middle States, 695.50; Western States, 445. Pennsylvania increased 276 per cent; Connecticut, 523; New Jersey, 379; Massachusetts, 373; Maryland, 255; Ohio, 278; Missouri, 726.

REVENUE TARIFF PROMOTES IRON PRODUCTION.

The production of iron ore increased 79.20 per cent, while the capital invested increased 126.30 per cent. The total number of hands employed in this industry was 45 per cent greater in 1860 than in 1850, and the total amount of wages paid was nearly 57 per cent greater.

PENNSYLVANIA SHARED WELL.

The production of pig iron increased 54 per cent in the United States; in Pennsylvania, 82 per cent; New Jersey, 105; Kentucky, 27; New York, 53. At the same time the price of pig iron was reduced from $23.43 in 1850 to $21.13 in 1860.

The increase in the value of bar, sheet, and railroad iron was more than 100 per cent. The number of hands employed increased 66 per cent, and the amount of wages paid, 80 per cent. Pennsylvania increased her production 106 per cent; Delaware, 230; Maryland, 104; Ohio, 173; Kentucky, 68; Virginia, 104.

Iron castings increased in the value of the product 74.80 per cent; in the Middle States, more than 100 per cent; in Pennsylvania, 100 per cent; in Maine, more than 520 per cent.

In the production of hardware there was an increase of 56.70 per cent, while the capital increased 90 per cent, and the number of hands employed, 53.50 per cent. The New England States increased 100 per cent, and made more hardware in 1860 than all the States made in 1850. Connecticut alone increased her production 103.80 per cent; New Jersey, 360; Ohio, 99; the Western States, 74 per cent.

STEEL INDUSTRY BORN UNDER THE REVENUE TARIFF.

The steel industry had its birth during the decade from 1850 to 1860. The product increased 99.5 per cent; capital invested, over 3,000; hands employed, 1,770; wages paid, 123.6.

In the manufacture of machinery, steam engines, etc., including locomotives, hay and cotton presses, and cotton and woolen machinery, the value of the product increased 66.6 per cent in the whole country, but in the Western States the increase was 217 per cent.

The manufacture of sewing machines was scarcely known in 1850, but in 1860 the value of the product was $4,247,820.

[Ex. Doc. No. 2, Senate, Thirty-ninth Congress, second session. Submitted by David A. Wells, Spec. Com'r. Revenue.]

Average rate of duty collected per capita for the periods named was:

Tariff of—

1846 to 1857, both inclusive	$1.88½
1858 to 1860, both inclusive	1.56
1846 to 1860, both inclusive	1.81⅔
1861 to 1864, both inclusive	1.84⅔
1890 to 1893, both inclusive	3.16⅔
1894 to 1897, both inclusive	2.18¼
1898 to 1905, both inclusive	2.96¼

By taking the average annual duty collected per capita (as published in a table contained in the speech of the Hon. James T. McCleary (Republican), RECORD, August 22, 1906) and dividing the sum thereof by the number of years, we get the results just stated.

The duty collected per capita, Dingley tariff, 1905, was $3.11. (Representative McCleary's speech.)

MORE REPUBLICANS COMMEND TARIFF, 1846.

Senator ALLISON, urging tariff reform in 1870, commended the Walker tariff. He said:

"It is claimed that the high rates of our present tariff are necessary because the revenue to be obtained therefrom is essential to the Government, and that if we reduce the rates at all the effect will be the depression of all the industrial interests of the country.

"The tariff of 1846, although confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect a tariff as any that we have ever had. If any interest was depressed under the tariff of 1846, it was the iron interest.

"INCREASE OF WEALTH.

"I do not believe that this interest, as compared with other interests, had sufficient advantage under that tariff; yet when we compare the growth of the country from 1840 to 1850 with the growth of the country from 1850 to 1860, the latter decade being entirely under the tariff of 1846 or the amended and greatly reduced tariff of 1857, we find that the increase in our wealth between 1850 and 1860 was equivalent to 126 per cent, while it was only 64 per cent between 1840 and 1850, four years of which decade were under the tariff of 1842, known as a high protective tariff, but the average rate of which was about 70 per cent below the existing rate, or 27 per cent under the tariff of 1842, as against 44 per cent upon all importations under the present tariff. Our industries were generally prosperous in 1860, with the exception, possibly, of the iron industry.

"This was the statement of Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, on this floor during the discussion of the tariff in 1864.

"With regard to the condition of the steel industry in 1860, the steel manufacturers in 1866, memorializing Congress for increase of duties on steel, stated that 'it was reserved to Pittsburg to bring about the first substantial and enduring success in the year 1860; and, encouraged by our example, numerous establishments have sprung into existence, as already indicated in this paper.'

"This shows that under the revenue tariff of 1857, which imposed only an ad valorem duty of 12 per cent on steel, a substantial success was achieved in the steel manufacture in 1860. I have read the language of the memorial."

NEW ENGLANDERS CHANGE FROM HIGH TO LOW TARIFF.

The New England Members of both Houses, as a rule, had voted for the high tariff of 1842, opposed the revenue tariff of 1846, but realizing its beneficial effects, and desiring to lessen the accumulation of the people's money in the Treasury, all three of the political parties voted for the much lower tariff, the act of 1857, entitled "An act reducing the duty on imports, and for other purposes," about which Senator Wilson of Massachusetts said:

SENATOR WILSON.

"In closing, Mr. Chairman, the remarks I have felt it my duty to submit to the Senate and the country that the Commonwealth I represent on this floor—I say in part for my colleague, Mr. Sumner, after an enforced absence of more than nine months, is here to-night to give his vote, if he can raise his voice, for the interest of his State—has a deep interest in the modification of the tariff of 1846 by this Congress. Her merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, and business men, in all departments of a varied industry, want action now before the Thirty-fourth Congress passes away. They are for the reduction of the revenue to the actual wants of an economical administration of the Government; for the depletion of the Treasury, now full with millions of hoarded gold; for a free list, embracing articles of prime necessity we do not produce; for mere nominal duties on articles which make up a large portion of our domestic industry, and for such an adjustment of the duties on the productions of other nations that come in direct competition with the product of American capital, labor, and skill, and shall impose the least burdens on that capital, labor, and skill."

PANIC OF 1857 WAS FINANCIAL AND BRIEF.

About the operations of the tariff of 1857, Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Massachusetts, before the Industrial Commission, 1901, said:

"I then come down to the tariff of 1857, the lowest ever known in this country, with the largest free list. The period from 1857 to the beginning of the civil war saw the most steady and constant development of the textile manufactures of this country that I have ever known. I do not think there has been any such historical coincidence as you suggest."

Q. "As a matter of history, was not the year 1857 the year of the great panic, from which we never recovered until the outbreak of the war?"

Mr. ATKINSON. "It was the year of the great bank panic, in which two of the commission houses to which my goods were consigned suspended payment. That lasted but a few months and was purely a financial panic. It did not interfere with the progress of arts and industries, and in 1858 great prosperity had returned.

"We were building the Lewiston mills and the Indian Orchard mills, and I was familiar with the whole business. From that time until the beginning of the war we saw the most steady progressive condition of prosperity in the textile art that I have ever known."

The tariff of 1857 having been purposely fixed to reduce the revenue, when the civil war came on of necessity the rates had to be raised to meet the expenses of that great struggle, and were raised by the first act, approved by President Lincoln August 5, 1861, entitled:

CIVIL WAR TARIFFS TO BE "TEMPORARY."

"An act to provide increased revenues from imports, pay interest on public debts, and for other purposes."

The act of July 14, 1862, was entitled:

"An act increasing, temporarily, the duties on imports, and for other purposes."

The act of April 29, 1864, was entitled:

"Joint resolution to increase, temporarily, the duties on imports."

And Senator Morrill, in explaining the act of June 30, 1864, the main war tariff, said:

"This is intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and we must give it our support as such."

The people generally had become so wedded to the happy effects of the low tariffs preceding the civil war that Members of Congress had to be assured that these war rates, in effect protective, were to be only "temporary," and hence Senator Morrill spoke as he did.

Senator Henry Wilson, in the Senate, in 1861, said:

TARIFF OF 1857 COMMENDED.

"It is very easy for a gentleman of the Northwest to rise on this floor and talk about protection to Pennsylvania and New England and to say that his people have no protection; but, sir, standing here to-day, I express it as my deliberate judgment that there are not half a dozen States—and I doubt whether there be among them all one—so little interested in changing the tariff as the State of Massachusetts. I say further, as the representative of that State, I know that in voting for this bill I am voting against the wishes of a large portion of the people of my State, who believe the present tariff better for us than your proposed tariff; and I vote, too, against my own deliberate judgment, for I had rather stand on the tariff of 1857 than take this bill."

Several Senators. "Then, why vote for it?"

Mr. Wilson. "I vote for it to increase the revenues of the Government. * * * I want no man to vote for this bill in order to protect the interests of Massachusetts; for the tariff of 1857, precisely and exactly as it stands upon your statute books to-day, so far as the productive industry of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is concerned, in all its various departments, amounting to $350,000,000 annually, is the best tariff ever put upon the statute books of this country. That is my judgment; and by passing this bill we shall gain nothing as a State. I shall vote for the bill, but I vote for it to raise revenue; I vote for it as a revenue measure."

These "temporary" tariffs were approved by President Lincoln, who was not a "stand-patter." As early as February 15, 1861, he said:

"Every varying circumstance will require frequent modifications as to the amount (of tariff) needed and the sources of supply. So far, there is little difference of opinion among the people."

He approved many different tariff acts.

It was during the operation of these high war tariffs that "protection" took deep root. Special interests grew up and fattened, immense fortunes were amassed, arming individuals with the power to perpetuate highly protective tariffs, against which Jackson, in his farewell address, warned the people in these patriotic words:

PRESIDENT JACKSON'S FAREWELL ADVICE.

"The corporations and wealthy individuals who are engaged in large manufacturing establishments desire a high tariff to increase their gains. Designing politicians will support it to conciliate their favor and to obtain the means of profuse expenditure for the purpose of purchasing influence in other quarters. * * * Do not allow yourselves, my fellow-citizens, to be misled on this subject. The Federal Government can not collect a surplus for such purposes without violating the principles of the Constitution and assuming power which has not been granted. It is, moreover, a system of injustice, and if persisted in will lead to corruption and must end in ruin."

There were few, if any, millionaires and no multimillionaires previous to the civil war, the people generally were prosperous from 1846 to 1860, the low tariff era, but in 1864 President Lincoln had noticed a change had been wrought "as a result of the war," and on November 21, 1864, it is said, he wrote his friend William S. Elkins, of Illinois, the following letter:

PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

"Yes, we may all congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is nearing its close. It has cost a vast amount of treasure and blood. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the nation might live. It has been, indeed, a trying hour for the Republic, but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country.

"As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all the wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war. God grant that my suspicions may be groundless."

George H. Shibley's book, "The Money Question," page 232, with this foot note:

The above was published in a collection of Lincoln's sayings, years and years ago, by Mr. Jesse Harper. Mr. Harper is still living, and is a respected citizen of Danville, Ill.

WHEN TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS STARTED.

Senator Sherman, March 24, 1890, said:

"We know that within twenty years, for the first time in the history of our country, combinations have been made, involving from eighty to one hundred million dollars, combinations so strong that it is impossible for any other combination to compete with them, combinations so powerful and exclusive as to reach every branch of trade and business in the United States. This has been going on during that time." (21, Cong. Rec., 2568.)

Senator Edmunds, March 27, 1890, in the same debate, said:

"These great monopolies * * * have come up mainly in the last twenty or thirty years."

REPUBLICAN TARIFF CHANGES.

Until the Republicans and their side partners, the protected monopolists, succeeded in securing the enactment of a tariff law that gives them practically control of the American market, by prohibiting competition from abroad on all articles of domestic manufacture, they did not regard tariff schedules as sacred as they do to-day. As showing the Republican record in this particular, the following list of acts from an official document issued by a joint Congressional committee in 1898 convicts the Republican party of conspiracy with the protected monopolists to continually tinker the tariff in their interests. The acts are as follows:

Act of March 2, 1861.
Act of August 5, 1861.
Act to increase the duties on tea, coffee, and sugar, December 24, 1861.
Act of July 14, 1862.
Act of March 3, 1863.
Joint resolution of April 29, 1864, temporarily increasing duties.
Act of June 30, 1864, to increase duties.
Act of March 3, 1865, amending certain acts imposing duties on imports.
Act of May 16, 1866, imposing duties on live animals.
Act of June 1, 1866, to protect lumbermen.
Act of July 28, 1866.
Act of March 2, 1867.
Act of March 22, 1867.
Joint resolution of March 2, 1867.
Act of March 25, 1867.
Act of March 26, 1867.
Act of March 29, 1867.
Act of February 3, 1868.
Act of February 19, 1869.
Act of February 24, 1869.
Act of July 14, 1870.
Act of December 22, 1870.
Act of January 30, 1871.
Act of March 5, 1872.
Act of April 5, 1872.
Act of May 1, 1872.
Act of June 6, 1872.
Act of March 10, 1872.
Act of March 3, 1873.
Act of May 9, 1874.
Act of June 3, 1874.
Act of June 18, 1874.
Act of June 22, 1874.
Another act of the same date.
Act of February 8, 1875.
Act of March 3, 1875.

On March 4, 1875, the Republican party lost control of legislation, and did not regain it until March 4, 1881. Then it resumed business for two years, as follows:

Joint resolution of March 11, 1882.
Act of May 4, 1882.
Act of December 23, 1882.
Act of March 3, 1883.
Another act of the same date.

On March 4, 1883, the Republican party lost control of legislation until March 4, 1889, when it resumed business again, with the following result:

Act of February 18, 1890.
Act of June 10, 1890.
Act of October 1, 1890 (the McKinley law).
Act of December 15, 1890.
Act of March 3, 1893.

Again the Republican party lost control of legislation, but resumed on March 4, 1897, with these results:

Act of July 24, 1897 (the Dingley law).
Another act of the same date.

Thus it appears that in forty-five years the Republicans have changed or revised the tariff law forty-eight times. Deducting from forty-five years the sixteen years that the Republicans have not controlled legislation, shows that in twenty-nine years they tinkered with the tariff forty-eight times, or an average of nearly once every seven months.

But at last the Republicans and their allied friends and providers of fat campaign barrels, the protected monopolists, having secured a measure that has so fostered and fattened the corporations that they are quite willing to stand pat, especially as they have succeeded in defeating the reciprocity treaties, to provide for which the tariff schedules were purposely increased 20 per cent beyond the rates that the protected monopolists named as sufficient to protect them from competition.

Hence the people are now burdened with this extra rate plus a revenue and a protective rate—three all told.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fittings and tools for pattern shop and extension of annex, $50,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in line 2, page 23, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 2, strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty," so as to read "$20,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is an appropriation which contains an amount for a building never authorized by Congress, never in the contemplation of Congress, but being built by the Navy Department in defiance of the law. In 1905 the naval appropriation contained an appropriation of $39,400 for the erection of a pattern shop for the Department of Engineering at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard. In 1907, Admiral Endicott, then Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and asked an additional appropriation of $61,200. He stated to the Naval Committee at the time that nothing had been done under the previous authorization because it would be absolutely impossible to get the kind of a building required. The Committee on Naval Affairs authorized the appropriation of the additional $61,200 to complete the pattern shop authorized in 1905. To this Congress is submitted an item for an urgent deficiency appropriation, $20,000 of which is for tools and $30,000 of which is to complete, as it is termed by the Department, an annex to this pattern shop.

I shall read what Admiral Hollyday said to the committee, so that this committee can understand the utter disregard that this Department pays to legislation of Congress.

In response to a question by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he said:

We had an appropriation for the building of a pattern shop and we asked for bids. We got two bids. One was for the pattern shop and the other was for a larger building, just such as we wanted. That was $50,000 in excess of the appropriation. We awarded the contract on the basis that if we got the money from Congress we could complete the building under the contract, and that otherwise, if we did not get it, we would have to take a smaller building, and then ask for a separate appropriation later.

So that the history of this pattern shop shows, after investigation by a committee of the House, $39,400 was awarded to the Department, and the Department refused to proceed, and got $61,200 additional. Admiral Endicott pointed out at that time that they had carefully made their plans so as to get the building for $100,000, but having got two bids, one within the appropriation and the other $50,000 above, they disregarded the law and awarded the contract for the larger building.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did not the last Congress pass an act making it an offense to act as this Department did?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did. The antideficiency act, as I recall it, specifically provided that if any Department official shall incur an obligation not authorized by law he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and excluded from office.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know of any effort being made by the Department of Justice to enforce that law and punish such employees of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not. I wish to say that from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations nobody would ever for an instant suspect that such a condition as this existed. No such excuse was given to the Committee on Appropriations for this condition. It was stated that a few days after the bids were opened another building in this yard burned down, and it was deemed inadvisable for that reason to readvertise, but that it was thought best to go on and put up this larger building. The letter which was submitted to the committee with the deficiency appropriation shows that that building was designed and planned to include an annex; so that instead of erecting a pattern shop for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, as Congress authorized, the Department proceeded to erect a pattern shop that would be sufficient for the entire needs of the yard if at any time in the future Congress deemed it advisable to consolidate the pattern shops of all the different bureaus up there.

Mr. Chairman, from the investigations that have been made upon this appropriation bill, it appears that recommendations submitted by officials asking for appropriations for deficiencies are absolutely unreliable. It is utterly impossible to take the statement of many of the men—I will not say all, but a great many of the different officials in the different Departments—and feel that they are telling the whole truth when they are asking Congress for appropriations.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] called attention to the fact that Congress passed not one, but two laws, designed to prevent deficiencies in appropriations in the Departments. They were passed largely as the result of the action of the Navy Department, which one year came asking $16,000,000 more than was authorized for the year for which the deficits were asked.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that they let the contract in this case for a larger amount than the appropriation was?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. Let me read again to the gentleman what Admiral Hollyday says:

We got two bids; one was for the pattern shop—

That was authorized in the naval appropriation act of 1905, which read:

Toward a pattern shop for steam engineering, $39,400.

We got two bids; one was for the pattern shop and the other was for a larger building, just such as we wanted. That was $50,000 in excess of the appropriation. We awarded the contract on the basis that if we got the money from Congress we could complete the building under this contract, and otherwise if we did not get it we would have to have a smaller building and then ask for a separate appropriation later.

Mr. MANN. Did they enter into a contract, does the gentleman know?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt, because as the hearings show, they have proceeded so far with the building that unless this money be appropriated at this time the contractor will be compelled to wait.

Mr. MANN. I understand the law prohibits the making of contracts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law absolutely prohibits it, and this is a most flagrant violation of the law. There is no pretense that they are building the pattern shop authorized, but they say that they are building, in addition to that, a pattern shop annex.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman ought to be very sure of his facts as to whether they entered into a contract. The asking of a bid might be one thing and not a violation of law, but the making of a contract in violation of law would be a very serious offense, I should think.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why is not that subject to the point of order, if the gentleman's statement is correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order would come too late now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why did not the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that, in view of statements that he has made to me in regard to certain facts brought out before the Committee on Naval Affairs in the last Congress regarding this matter, I am going to ask unanimous consent that this item be passed without prejudice until I can investigate the facts. The principal argument made to us, so far as the necessity for this was concerned, was the destruction of the pattern shop recently by fire. If the facts are as stated by the gentleman from New York, I think there ought to be some modification of this. I ask unanimous consent to pass it without prejudice, until I can investigate it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before it is passed I simply desire to say that the gentleman from Minnesota is accurate in his statements that these facts were not presented to the committee; not only that, but they were hidden deeply in hearings before another committee last year and in 1905. It was simply because of some knowledge about the way this navy-yard has been indefensibly built up, uselessly, so far as the needs of this counry are concerned, that I have been able to ascertain the facts.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say that this appropriation was recommended, as I understand, by the Department that looks after these matters. The purpose is to continue the employment of a considerable number of skilled men who are there. Whenever the name of Portsmouth is mentioned in a naval appropriation bill, or any other bill, my good, distinguished, excellent friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] goes into something that might be considered a state of hydrophobia, or something else, and always attacks it. As the chairman of the committee has asked that this item be passed over, I submit that when he investigates it it will be found that everything is as regular here as a well-regulated clock ever ran, and that this is an appropriation which ought to be made. I do not propose to take any more time until the chairman is ready to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent that the pending paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for Medical Department, including all objects mentioned under this title of appropriation in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1908, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in charge of the bill, whether this item includes anything in reference to the outfit of the so-called hospital ship in charge of a surgeon.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the paragraph referred to by the gentleman from Illinois includes nothing whatever for the hospital ship Relief. The Department submitted an estimate of $22,500 for the employment of a civilian crew and navigators on the hospital ship Relief. Some question arose as to whether there was any law authorizing the employment of a civilian crew upon a naval vessel under the command of an officer of the Medical Corps, or of the staff, and the estimate was withdrawn, and the sum was provided, as I understand, for this purpose by taking one or two colliers out of commission, thereby saving enough to put this ship in commission and employing a civilian crew.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to marine barracks and officers' quarters, Camp Elliott, Isthmian Canal Zone, Panama, $10,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking how this happens to be a deficiency.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is not a deficiency, but an emergency appropriation. The Panama Canal estimates for the next fiscal year carried an estimate of $10,000 for this purpose. When the members of the committee were on the Isthmus examining the estimates for the next fiscal year, they ran across this item, and the Panama Canal Commission were informed that we would not carry an item in the Panama Canal appropriation for any part of the maintenance of the Marine Corps or barracks for the men that were there, and the estimate was dropped in that connection.

The buildings are in bad shape. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that we saw them. There are none of them screened. This appropriation is for the purpose of putting the buildings in shape that the men can live there and be protected from mosquitoes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then the real fact is they have not adequate protection?

Mr. TAWNEY. They have not adequate protection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And this ought to be immediately available for that purpose?

Mr. TAWNEY. This ought to be immediately available for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

To pay the United States Express Company for expressage furnished the office of the Secretary of the Interior March 22, 1904, for transportation of one trunk containing official papers, sent from the General Land Office, Washington, D. C., to E. B. Linnen, special land inspector, Phoenix, Ariz., $10.69.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will make an explanation of the item. The voucher for this item was lost in the process of adjustment through the officers of the Department and not found until some time after the close of the fiscal year 1904, and after the appropriation for that year became exhausted. The obligation is due from the United States, the voucher is correct and should be paid. It is an audited account. The voucher was lost in transmission.

Mr. MANN. If it be found to be a proper deficiency, let them determine it up there. I have no objection to the amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is an audited account.

Mr. MANN. But in the audited accounts you do not appropriate to a man by name; you only supply the deficiency.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, we do; we say to whom the money shall be paid.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, of course, is much more familiar with these matters than I am, but in the audited accounts all you do is to supply the amount of the deficiency and let the Department settle to whom the money shall be paid. Here you make a provision that is entirely different in settlement from the provisions in the ordinary appropriations for deficiencies. The process of collecting in this case is worth more than the amount of the item, and it is worth more to the Government. You have to go through a different process and it goes on to a different set of books than if you appropriated a sum of money to be paid in the regular course.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that these deficiencies always carry appropriations for the payment of audited accounts, and the bill itself refers to the document, sent here by the Treasury Department, which document contains the name of every person who is entitled to the payment of the audited account. This is a matter that was not sent to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury; it was an audited account in the Interior Department, the voucher had been drawn for it, and would have been paid out of the appropriation during the life of that appropriation had the voucher been found in time for payment.

Mr. MANN. Well, I would like the opinion of the gentleman from Minnesota in reference to the matter. I have no disposition to resist the payment of a small claim like that, although I do not think the Government ought to be put to the bother of its being paid in this way. If the gentleman will turn to page 46 of the bill, he will find claims allowed by the Auditor of the Treasury Department. There is no appropriation by name of anyone, and while it refers to the document, still the proof is exactly the same as though it had not referred to the document. The very first item on page 46 is "for pay of assistant custodians and janitors, $30." If you appropriate to pay John Smith a certain amount of money, the process of getting it out of the Treasury is entirely different.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is purely a matter of convenience of not printing the names. I have here a document containing the names of the individuals who are entitled to appropriations referred to by the gentleman from Illinois on page 46. It is a document of twenty-four pages. If we were to carry the names of each individual who is entitled to the amount appropriated for the payment of his audited account, the bill would be enormous in size and entirely unnecessary. In this instance, the particular person mentioned in the audited account, to whom the voucher has been issued, is mentioned in the act.

Mr. MANN. With the gentleman's statement that this is an audited account, as far as I am concerned, I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol, flagstaffs, halyards, and tackle, wages of mechanics and laborers; purchase, maintenance, and driving of office vehicle, $5,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order on that, I would like to inquire of the chairman what the original appropriation for that was.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty thousand dollars. That was incident to the change from this building over to the other building, and the maintenance and everything of that kind.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That involved an expenditure that was not contemplated when the estimates were made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will not make the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse George S. Cunningham and H. M. Sullivan for loss of time and doctors' fees on account of injuries received while employed in the construction of the Office Building for the House of Representatives, $250 each; in all, $500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if that is an audited claim.

Mr. TAWNEY. No, there is no question but that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman to reserve it until I make an explanation.

Mr. PERKINS. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. There have been two cases prior to this where injuries were received by employees under the superintendent of the Capitol in the construction of the House Office Building. They were not allowed any damages, but we appropriated to reimburse them for the amount expended on account of the medical services and medicines. These employees are practically under the House organization. Men in the employ of contractors are reimbursed for expenditures of this character, and there is no good reason why these men should not be.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no difference in principle. Mr. Chairman, I should not have raised a point of order to this item, which is perhaps in some respects a meritorious item, if it were not for the fact that the position is taken in the House, is taken by the Committee on Claims, that they will not consider any claim against the Government for any injuries sustained by an employee for which he could have an action against the private employer. I have myself introduced a bill for a man who in the navy-yard lost his eye, certainly a very serious injury, under circumstances for which I think he could have recovered against a private employer. The committee takes the position that no such claim can be or will be considered, and as that position is taken before one committee, certainly it should be insisted upon by all committees, and there should not be a different sauce for the goose from what there is for the gander.

Mr. TAWNEY. The House has heretofore adopted provisions for the relief of two of the employees under the Superintendent of the Capitol, employed in the construction of the House Office Building. That is the precedent for this.

Mr. PERKINS. If I had been here I should certainly have objected.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the amounts proposed do not contemplate reimbursement for loss of time or damages sustained by reason of injuries, but are merely to reimburse the men for medical attendance, and, as I am informed by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building, the injuries were received without any fault or negligence whatever on the part of the injured person. This is simply to pay for medical attendance and medicines in consequence of those injuries.

Mr. PERKINS. I dare say that may be so, but precisely analogous cases are refused any consideration before other committees.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not exactly analogous cases. These men were virtually employed under the supervision of the House of Representatives itself.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That does not change the legal status.

Mr. PERKINS. That does not change the legal status, and I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, $70,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of per diem, in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3 per day, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices, and to assist in opening new land offices and reservations, while on such duty, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks, including necessary sleeping-car fares: Provided further, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The examination of this item by the committee developed a rather astonishing condition of affairs in the public land offices of the country. It developed the fact that in many of the local land offices there are contest cases of from 500 to 2,200 that had not been set for hearing, and that this condition of affairs has existed for a number of years, and that it was due to the fact that the Department had not asked sufficient funds or that it had not used the funds at its command for the purpose of furnishing clerks to the registers and receivers in sufficient numbers to enable them to set these cases for hearing and have them heard speedily.

It is well known that the most potent and effective agency in guarding the public lands from misappropriation is the influence of the potential contestant, that all the special agents and examiners that may be employed do not and can not exert and have never exerted anything like the continuous and compelling influence in preventing noncompliance with and evasion of the law that is constantly exerted by those living in the vicinity of public lands under entry who may desire to make entry of those lands in case the claimants or settlers upon them are not complying with the law. This influence is being exerted all the time without cost to the Government, and all that Government is required to do in order that this potent influence may be continuously exerted is, when called upon, to set a time and place for a hearing and to hear the case, and yet it develops that at a time when officials of the Interior were coming to Congress each year demanding larger and larger appropriations for high-salaried special inspectors, inquisitors, and sleuths, to go roaming up and down through the public-land States for the purpose of discovering alleged fraud or evasion of the law, the Department was, by its own admission, failing utterly to take advantage of the aid of contestants, of the people in the localities, in the enforcement of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Furthermore, the rights and interests of the contestants in these cases were being utterly ignored by reason of the failure of the Department to provide, at a small expense, a few additional clerks to assist the registers and receivers in these hearings. I am pleased to note that the present Secretary of the Interior has departed from the practice of his predecessor in this matter and now proposes to furnish the registers and receivers with sufficient assistance that contest cases may be speedily tried, to the end that the interests of the Government and of the people may be protected and that the rights and interests of the contestant and contestee may be speedily determined.

From the hearing had before the committee it seems, and I think every Member here from a public-land State can bear testimony to that fact, that contest cases have been pending in local land offices for as long a period as two years to two years and a half, during which time the contestant, the intending entryman, has been unable to have his case tried and the matter at issue adjudicated, and during which long period the contestant and the contestee in these cases have been unable to know what their respective rights were, and they have thereby been subjected to serious and in many cases very great loss and inconvenience. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to know of the change in policy which this appropriation contemplates. I am glad to know that we are to have contest cases speedily tried, and that the Government is to see to it that in the future the public lands are protected in this the most economical and satisfactory manner in which that can be done, and that from now on it is proposed to give the contestant an early opportunity to prove his allegations, or for the entryman to disprove them.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will look to page 133 of the hearings he will see an itemized statement of all these contests, showing in each particular case how long they have been standing.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have read the statement to which the gentleman refers, and it indicates that some of these cases have been pending for several years and that the failure to give speedy hearings has discouraged the bringing of contests. I have personal knowledge of cases that have been pending more than two years, and I have pleaded with the officials of the Interior Department in the past to furnish our registers and receivers additional clerical help, to the end that these cases may be tried, and I am glad to know that the present officials of the General Land Office are alive to the importance of furnishing registers and receivers efficient assistance in bringing this work up to date. The registers and receivers must look after the current business of their offices, which has been large for some time past, and as they have not been provided with sufficient help to take up the contest cases they are necessarily neglected in order that the current work may be cared for.

This neglect of the interests of the Government, of the contestant, and of the honest entryman alike, due to the failure of the Department to furnish efficient assistance, at a comparatively trifling cost, to the local officers of the Department has been going on at a time when Congress has been clamorously importuned to still further increase the already generous appropriation for special officers to spy upon and harass the settler. The operations and methods of some of these sleuths would do credit to the most illustrious agents of the Russian bureaucracy. Vested with wide authority over rights and property, they have exercised it in many cases with reckless disregard for the rights of the citizen and apparently actuated vastly more with a desire to lengthen their employment and achieve notoriety than to do justice or enforce the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of hearings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, and of hearings in disbarment proceedings, $21,137.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do not clearly understand why the bill uses the language that it does in this paragraph, to wit, for hearings "to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law." It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is questionable whether——

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me state to the gentleman from Wyoming that is the language under which the appropriation for the current year is carried, and we of course follow that language in making this additional appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with the language, providing the Department so interprets it that all of the hearings provided for or intended to be provided for may be held under it, but I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the language is misleading. We have heard a very great deal in the past few years about public-land frauds. There have always been public-land frauds and there always will be, as there is more or less fraud in connection with the transaction of any large business, but the extent of those frauds has been very much exaggerated and magnified in the past few years.

In view of that fact, I could not resist the temptation to call attention to the fact that large numbers of the hearings provided for in this paragraph are not, as a matter of fact, hearings for the purpose of determining the fraudulent character of entries or fraud connected with entries. If the Department so construes the language that it can provide for these hearings under it, well and good. But the fact is that many of these hearings are had to determine a multitude of questions involving no fraud, thought of fraud, or intent to defraud. The special agents of the General Land Office traveling through the country find from a hurried examination or hear of through neighborhood gossip, sometimes honest, more often idle or malicious, or from communications, oftentimes anonymous, tracts of land with regard to which it may seem or be claimed the entryman is not complying with the law, and the agent calls upon him to show cause why his entry should not be canceled, and a hearing is called.

Very recently my attention was called to a case where a special agent had reported a certain entry for cancellation, and the entryman had been compelled to ask for a hearing in support of his claim. The latter was given notice of the fact that the special agent claimed to have found upon his entry only a small frame shack and no other improvements, and he was called to defend his claim. He attended the hearing at a very considerable expense. There was no question of fraud, but of compliance with the provisions of the law. The entryman when he received his notice knew at once that the special agent had never visited his land, for instead of having a small frame shack on his homestead he had a large sod and log house, a large log barn and some forty or fifty acres under cultivation. But he must ask for a hearing nevertheless.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. He was successful in defending his entry. There are very many somewhat similar cases, and the majority of those in which hearings are held relate not to questions of fraud, but to a strict compliance with some provision of law or of the regulations and not involving a question of fraud on the part of the entry. Then, Mr. Chairman, there is that large number of cases in which special agents, men not versed in the knowledge of geology, not acquainted with the formations, come to the conclusion that homestead or other entries may overlie mineral-bearing land, and where the entryman is called upon to defend his right against the charge that his land is, in fact, coal land or mineral land.

Not long ago there were large blanket withdrawals of land made on the ground that they were coal lands. The only information the Department had in many instances on which to found its belief that these lands were coal lands was that at least at one point in the township a coal declaratory statement had been made, and where a coal declaratory statement had been made any time within the last thirty-four years during which we have had a coal-land law, though the tract might consist of only 80 acres, the entire 24,000 acres in that township was withdrawn as coal land, and thereupon the entrymen in that entire township were sooner or later liable to be brought before the registers and receivers to show cause why their entries should not be canceled because located upon coal lands.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. While the gentleman is on the question of fraud, I simply want to give some information as to what I discovered. A statement was made by the Secretary of the Interior, I believe, in his report for either 1904 or 1905, that 80 per cent of a certain number of proofs were fraudulent, and when upon examination I asked what the character of fraud was, the only fraud that had been committed was that the claimant had mortgaged the land after it was proved up, or it had been sold within a certain time after it had been proved up, and this was characterized by the Department as "fraud."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be, and I do not think I am, overcritical of the Department in regard to anything it may do in attempting to protect the public domain from illegal or improper appropriation, but the gentleman from North Dakota has given a good illustration of much of the so-called "fraud."

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to.

Mr. STERLING. In speaking of the mineral land, when can this question as to whether or not land is mineral land be raised—at any time before the patent is issued or after the settler has made his improvement? Is it possible, then, to oust him in case it turns out to be mineral land?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government may raise the question as to the mineral or nonmineral character of the land any time prior to the completion of proof; or, to put it another way, any time prior to the date when the entryman shall have done all of the things required of him under the law to perfect his title.

Mr. STERLING. Suppose he has paid part of the money; does he lose that if it proves to be mineral land?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not a question of what he may have paid, but whether or not he shall have done all of those things required by law to perfect his title. When these are done, the courts hold, I believe, that the question as to the character of the land can no longer be raised, unless it be shown that the entryman knew or had reason to believe the land contained mineral, in other words, on the ground of fraud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. The question of the character of the land or any other material matter connected with the entry can be raised before or after patent on the ground of fraud. The entry may be attacked in the courts for a period of six years after the issuance of patents.

Mr. STERLING. The question of fraud would depend wholly, I suppose, on whether the entryman knew it was mineral land at the time.

Mr. MONDELL. If the entryman knew or had reason to believe that the land was mineral at the time he entered it as agricultural land he could be dispossessed even after receiving a patent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that I did not wish to be understood as intending to criticise the Department for any efforts that they have made to protect the public domain from illegal appropriation. I do believe that the Department has exceeded its authority under the law in its widespread withdrawal of alleged coal lands, and I know that it has worked very great hardship on many honest entrymen. I know, and if I had time I should like to go into that question, that that withdrawal has created a coal monopoly in the hands of those having producing mines and doubled the price of coal, but I am not discussing that matter now. What I started to call the attention of the House to was the fact that these hearings are not necessarily hearings involving the question of fraud. When the Government brings the entryman to the bar of the register and receiver to prove the charcater of his land, it does not necessarily involve the question of fraud on his part, but often to determine certain questions as to compliance with the law and as to the character of the land, questions on which there may honestly be the widest divergence of opinion. Now I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STERLING. I want to ask this question: You say that an entry may be attached within six years. Suppose the entryman has sold the land to what would be called an innocent purchaser, the innocent purchaser never having had an opportunity to investigate or inquire into the character of the land at the time the entry was made. Can that be made against the innocent purchaser?

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to think it could; the Government has that length of time within which to attach on the ground of fraud, and therefore the patent, if found to have been obtained through fraud, conveyed no right that the entryman could transfer to a purchaser from him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that these appropriations will be allowed, because they are necessary for carrying on the work of the General Land Office. But I desire to emphasize the fact that these hearings are largely hearings brought by the Government to determine questions involving no fraud whatever; and it seems to me, therefore, that it would be well for the Department in the future to so change the wording of this appropriation that there may be no question of the propriety of using the appropriation for these general hearings involving all classes of questions relating to the public lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

For continuation of the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska, $80,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1909.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this appropriation for the Geological Survey is not a deficiency. It is necessary to be carried in this bill on account of the fact that if it is carried in the sundry civil bill with the other appropriations for the Geological Survey it would become valuable when the season for work in Alaska was half over, and for that reason this item is always carried in the first appropriation bill of the session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for support of Indian day and industrial schools and for other educational purposes, $50,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, after line 18, insert:

"For the erection, complete, of a suitable school building to replace the one destroyed by fire at Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., $15,000."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this is for the purpose of enabling the Department to replace one of the Indian school buildings that has recently been destroyed by fire. The matter was not included in the estimates that were sent to the committee, but we have received a letter from the Commissioner asking that it be inserted in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed to place on the books of the Treasury, to the credit of the Lower Brulé Sioux Indians in South Dakota, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase of cattle, mares, and stallions, or for such other purposes as he may deem to be for the best interests of the Indians: Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed to the United States from the first proceeds received from the sale of the lands described in the act of April 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 125), belonging to said Lower Brulé Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph. It seems to me that it is a matter that ought to go to the Indian Committee, which has its annual appropriation bill pending in the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the only reason this item is carried in this deficiency appropriation bill is this: These Indians have been taken up into South Dakota. Some time ago they were rather troublesome, if not on the warpath. Now they are up in South Dakota, where they have been employed in the construction of a new railroad. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs informs us that during the winter it will be impossible for these Indians to keep employed and to maintain themselves, and this is for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Department of the Interior to provide suitable supplies for them to tide them over the winter until they can get to work again in the spring. Of course it would be absolutely impossible to do that if they awaited the passage of the Indian appropriation bill, which probably will not become a law until late in the session, after the winter is over.

Mr. MANN. The item purports to provide for the purchase of cattle and horses. I do not see that there is any pressing necessity, in order to tide Indians over the winter, that they should buy stock for breeding purposes, as this evidently contemplates.

Now, the Indian appropriation bill is on the Calendar. If the Committee on Indian Affairs believe that this ought to be put in and made immediately available, I have no doubt the House would be with them on that proposition. I have never yet been able to fathom very much information about the Indians.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the item that I referred to was the item preceding the one which the Clerk has just read.

The explanation of the item against which the point of order has been reserved is found in House Document 35, containing the following letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 30, 1907.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the favorable consideration of the Congress, the attached item making an appropriation of $50,000 for the Lower Brulé Sioux in South Dakota, to be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds received from the sale of their lands, provided for by the act of April 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 125).

The act provides that the lands shall be sold at the appraised price, one-fifth to be paid in cash at the time of entry and the balance in five equal annual installments, to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from the date of entry. The lands were opened for settlement by proclamation of the President, issued August 12, 1907.

It is the intention of the Department to expend a large part of the proceeds received from the sale of these lands in the purchase of stock cattle, mares, and stallions for the Indians and to have them well established in stock raising before their trust period expires. In order that this may be done, however, it is essential to begin the work at once instead of waiting till enough money shall have come in to meet expenses. Such delay must occur unless the Congress will advance the money to these Indians during the coming session, to be reimbursed gradually as money is paid in by purchasers of their lands. It may be two years before the full amount advanced can be returned, owing to the deferred-payment feature of the act first cited, but to wait that long without the means of starting their enterprise would be a serious thing for them when we consider that their herds might during that time be doubled by the natural increase. The whole desire of the Department is to get the Indians started in a business to which they are well adapted by nature and training and in which their success seems only a question of timely financial assistance and a little encouragement.

The value of the lands to be sold has been fixed by actual appraisal at about $100,000. In asking the Congress, therefore, to advance one-half the anticipated returns, I feel assured that the Government will not be assuming a liability that the resources of the Indians can not meet, but that their indebtedness will in all probability be liquidated in two or three years.

I earnestly recommend this legislation to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MANN. Was this communication referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was.

Mr. MANN. Evidently it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations by inadvertence, because it plainly belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am willing to take the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, because I have faith that they know even more than the Committee on Appropriations about the Indians. I know they know a great deal more about them than I shall ever learn.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and knowing that fact, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations took the precaution of consulting the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in regard to this item, and he said that it was necessary to be carried in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. Then he can insert it in the Indian appropriation bill on the floor of the House, if he can explain it to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it will not be available until the 1st of next July.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but we understood that the Committee on Appropriations had taken care of the item in this urgent deficiency bill, and for that reason we left it out of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. It is easy enough to insert it in the Indian bill, and we have the right to the judgment of the committee on matters of this sort, because if there is anything we are ignorant about it is Indian affairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of course if it is subject to a point of order on this bill it would be subject to a point of order on the Indian bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the Secretary of the Interior power under the law to do that which the paragraph directs him to do?

Mr. MANN. If the Secretary of the Interior had the discretion, it would not affect this. Here is a positive requirement that the Secretary shall do a certain thing which the law does not require him to do.

The CHAIRMAN. On the face of it the paragraph limits the discretion of the executive officer. Can the gentleman from Minnesota call the attention of the Chair to any law?

Mr. TAWNEY. The proceeds from the sale of these lands will be applied to the purpose specified, and it is merely anticipating these proceeds. It is for the purpose of enabling the Department to aid the Indians in that work immediately, instead of waiting until the lands can be sold.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that it would be just as much subject to a point of order on the Indian bill as upon this bill, and if this authority is to be granted at all it ought to be done now, to enable the Department of the Interior to commence making the purchases for these people, to give them employment, which is essential in order to make good Indians of them, which the Department of the Interior desires to accomplish. Here is a proposition to dispose of certain Indian lands appraised at $100,000, the proceeds from the sale of the lands to be used as it is proposed to use the $50,000 here appropriated, in purchase of horses, etc., to enable the Indians to commence farming. Now, it is only a question of order whether we will anticipate the receipts from the sale of these lands by advancing one-half of the money or allow the Indians to remain idle until the land can be sold and the proceeds applied as the law directs that such proceeds should be applied.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to discuss the question of order. I wish to make a statement of what has been the practice in similar cases. It has been customary for Congress to appropriate from the public moneys certain sums to purchase stock and materials to enable the Indian tribes that have no means to engage in farming or other useful occupations.

My recollection of the act referred to in this paragraph is that it provided for the sale of certain surplus lands of the tribe under the homestead laws, for the minimum price fixed for lands, and after the lands were sold the proceeds were to be converted into the Treasury and passed to the credit of the tribe for their benefit as Congress appropriated it. In this instance, instead of making a gratuity to the Indians, it is intended that the proceeds of the sale of the lands shall be anticipated and paid out. There may be some question as to whether the lands will bring the amount estimated, but it is nevertheless true that if the lands do not bring the amount estimated Congress has never failed to appropriate as a gratuity the money required to enable the Indians to engage in useful occupations.

These particular Indians are in that condition, and the Department believes that if they are supplied with the stock provided for here they can be the more speedily put in a condition where they will be self-dependent. My experience in the Committee on Indian Affairs convinced me that the more quickly Indians can be put to work the more quickly will we be rid of the Indian problem, and that whenever money is to be appropriated for any particular tribe to engage in farming or other pursuits, it is to the advantage of the Government to appropriate the money, because until the Indians are made independent we have to support them out of the general funds in the Treasury.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to state just one word, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the reference of this document to the Committee on Appropriations. It has always been the rule when estimates or matters of this kind are sent by the head of a Department to the Speaker for legislative action, if the proposed action is necessary or if it appears from the document itself that such action should be taken before the beginning of the next fiscal year, to refer the matter to the Committee on Appropriations, and it is there considered in connection with emergency or deficiency appropriations. In view of the statement contained in the document that it was necessary and for the benefit of the Indians that this work should be done at once, there is no question about the committee having the right to consider this matter; nor is there any question that the reference of this document to the Committee on Appropriations is entirely proper, and its consideration by the Committee on Appropriations was within the rule of the committee and within the rule of the House; and I want to say, further, that after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs it was his wish and recommendation that it be carried in this bill in order that the policy of the Department, which is to put these Indians to work as soon as possible, might be carried out.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr Chairman, I notice very peculiar phraseology in this section. It says here that this money is to be expended in the purchase of cattle, mares, and stallions or for such other purposes as he, the Secretary of the Interior, may deem to be for the best interests of the Indians. The query in my mind is whether under such broad phraseology as that the Secretary of the Interior might not build a race track or construct an amusement hall or spend the money in any way he saw fit to do for the amusement or the entertainment or the instruction or anything else of the Indians. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the meaning of that.

Mr. BONYNGE. He might expend it in war dances.

Mr. TIRRELL. Or in war dances, as has been suggested very appropriately.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is supposed, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of the Interior would apply that money, in his judgment, under that language, to anything that would inure to the benefit or profit of the Indians. That is the language that is used in all of the legislation of this character that Congress has enacted. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] knows of an instance where that discretion has been abused by the Secretary of the Interior and the money not applied in such a way as to be of profit and advantage and benefit to the Indians and can cite that instance, why, we can change the language so as to avoid anything of that kind in the future.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rather think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], is in error in supposing that language is customarily used.

Mr. TAWNEY. In matters of this kind.

Mr. MANN. It may be occasionally used, but certainly is not customarily used. Mr. Chairman, I hate to stand in the way of the Indian starting a breeding establishment, but if this appropriation were made available to-day these cattle and horses would not be purchased before the 1st of next July—too late for this year's breeding—and a matter of this sort ought to come after consideration by the committee. I know that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has a very wide acquaintance with Indian affairs, and if it was something within his knowledge I would take his personal judgment against the personal judgment of any other Member of the House, unless it be the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SHERMAN]. But it seems to me that it ought to be the policy of the House to require the Departments to go before the committees with which they deal and not bring into the House, through a deficiency bill from the Committee on Appropriations, something with which it is not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to be familiar and with which it is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs to be familiar. The Committee on Indian Affairs has an appropriation bill pending in the House. This money will not be used this year; would not be used this spring whether it is appropriated now or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what basis does the gentleman from Illinois make that statement?

Mr. MANN. On the basis of being a practical farmer, which the gentleman is not. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I will put my experience on the farm against the experience of the gentleman from Illinois, and say that it is entirely competent for the Department to buy stock in the spring of the year. We do not wait until the 1st of July to commence buying stock.

Mr. MANN. That is just what I am saying. The Department moves in all cases so slowly that if this appropriation were available to-day it would not commence to buy the stock before the 1st of July, which is too late in the season.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that there is not anything so difficult about this proposition that any Member of this House, except the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], could not understand upon a very cursory examination. It is purely a question of policy.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is fair, after I just said I would take his word against that of anybody else in the House? [Laughter]. Mr. Chairman, I shall not retract my statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Nor shall I. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. And the Members of the House know that the gentleman from Minnesota, no matter how much he is in error, never acknowledges it, though I do occasionally.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the law authorizes the disposition of these lands for the benefit of the Indians, the proceeds to be applied to the purchase of animals, farm implements, etc., that will enable them to engage in the business of agriculture.

Now, the only question involved is this: Is Congress willing to advance them one-half of the amount of the appraised value of the land in order that they may begin work at once rather than wait six months or a year or two years, which they otherwise would have to do? There is no difficulty about it. I had supposed that with the indorsement and approval and the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that this should be carried in this bill in order to go into effect immediately it would be sufficient to satisfy even my distingushed friend from Illinois. Therefore I hope he will withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order:

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair the paragraph is new legislation, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it will be so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS.

That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and directed to expend so much of the appropriation for printing for the Department of Commerce and Labor allotted by law to the Census Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, as may be necessary to continue and complete the publication of the names of the heads of families returned at the First Census of the United States, as authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 30, 1906.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what appears to have been an oversight in referring to the Census Office in the subtitle, in line 18, as "Bureau of the Census." In line 22 the same office is called the "Census Office," and that is the name designated in the law.

Mr. MANN. That splits it even, then, between the Department and Bureau.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state, Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is this: It has one name by Executive order and another by law, and in order to overcome that and get the Census Office in the law we have used both names.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is not quite accurate in that statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely.

Mr. LANGLEY. There was a departmental order which directed that the name be changed from "Census Office" to "Bureau of the Census," but since that order was issued Congress, in every appropriation bill carrying census items and in special census legislation, has ignored the Department designation and has used the legal name "Census Office," both in caption and text. The use of two names for the same office creates needless confusion. I may add that in all the libraries of the world American census publications are catalogued as publications of the "Census Office." They can not be called by any other name because the census law specifically directs that they shall be so designated. Inasmuch as "Census Office" is thus the legal name, I think the caption should conform to the text, and I therefore offer this amendment:

Page 28, line 18, strike out the words "Bureau of the Census" and insert "Census Office."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 18, strike out the words "Bureau of the Census" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Census Office."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky raises an interesting question. When we created the Department of Commerce and Labor there was transferred to it the Census Office. That was the designation by law of the Office. There was transferred to it the Department of Labor. That was the designation by law of that branch of the service. There were transferred to it various other branches of the public service from different Departments, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, etc. These went into the Census Office, having been created by law under different titles and having different designations.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in order that there might be some homogenity in the new Department, provided that each of these offices should be designated as a bureau, not affecting the legal title under the law, but as a matter of convenience in the administration of the office in keeping accounts, and each of them was designated as a bureau. It is an aid to the Department, it is an aid to the Treasury Department, it is a convenience to Congress in ascertaining what takes place in the bureaus, and this discretion which the Secretary had in so designating these different branches of the service for the convenience of the Department it seems to me ought not to be overruled by Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not a fact that in preceding appropriation bills, where the Census Office has been referred to, that have been passed since the order to which you refer was issued, that the name of the office, even the subtitle to the census section, has always been "Census Office?"

Mr. MANN. Well, I think not, but the gentleman may be better informed on that subject than I am.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think I am.

Mr. MANN. I know that in most of those bureaus they put in the title of "Bureau of" so-and-so, although that is not the legal designation under which the office was created, and I raised the question, as the gentleman is raising it now, when this was done. I went to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, as I had reported that bill in the House when the Department was created, and I objected to this arbitrary, it seemed to me, designation to the various branches of the service. And it was explained to me, and it seemed to me in a way that carried conviction, that it was for the convenience of everybody concerned that the different branches of this service so far as possible should be known by the same kind of designation, at least, in the Department.

Mr. LANGLEY. In the Department; but that does not control Congress, of course.

Mr. MANN. Congress can change the designation as it pleases.

Mr. LANGLEY. And it has done so in the case of the "Census Office."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me that if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] should be agreed to it will not make a bit of difference with the custom and the practice of the Department to classify and name the various bureaus as it pleases and keep its accounts that way. The subtitle of a bill is not legislation anyway. It is a sort of guide for it—a sort of an index. It does not affect the legislation and I do not think it can affect the character of the bill in any way, or can not affect the right of the Department to go on and keep its accounts just as it is doing now. The only thing desired to be accomplished, I suppose, by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is uniformity of legislation, and that the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor desires to have uniformity in the administration of his great Department. I do not think the amendment is material in every respect, and it can not interfere with the right of the Secretary to do as he chooses, for he has had the right in the past, and I think he got the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States to the effect that he had the right to designate the administrative bills in his Department in such a way as he saw fit, and he has designated them as bureaus and keeps his accounts in that way.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Attorney-General's opinion has been superseded by subsequent legislation. I want to say also, in reply to the gentleman, that the accounts of the Census Office are kept in that office, and by the accounting officers of the Treasury, under the designation of "Census Office." If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and the chairman of the committee desire it to be understood, and desire the House to understand, that the legal name of the office is "Census Office," and that this proposed subtitle does not affect that question, I do not desire to insist upon the amendment. But as it appears in the bill it is confusing, because the office is called by one name in the subtitle and by another name in the body of the section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, to me it makes no difference at all. I stated what I did because there was friction when this was first done. Every one of these different branches of the service objected to the reorganization, under which they were all classed as bureaus, and with some justice probably. But I would say it was doubtful whether the Census Office could make it a distinct office and still be known as the "Census Office."

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] will not withdraw the amendment, because I think the important question ought to be settled now, if it has been debated sufficiently for the committee to understand it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought it had, and that was why I did not reply more fully to——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] knew how much friction had been raised over this question in the Census Bureau he would not object to its being debated in here for a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Salaries, Division of Naturalization: For the following for the balance of the fiscal year 1908: One clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; in all, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Immigration station, Ellis Island, New York: For addition to old Ellis Island hospital building, complete, $250,000;

For additional buildings in contagious-disease hospital group, $150,000;

For new water main between Ellis Island and Jersey City, $18,000;

In all, $418,000, which sum shall be paid from the permanent appropriation "Expenses of regulating immigration."

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I see between lines 9 and 18 that various sums of money are appropriated, amounting in all to $418,000, and I would like to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill to explain how these various amounts were arrived at.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman mean the Ellis Island appropriations?

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amount is made up of three items. One is to provide for a contagious-disease hospital and the other is to provide for an addition to an existing hospital, and the item of $18,000 is for the purpose of providing a new and an additional water main.

They get their water there from Jersey City. There is but one main, and recently that broke. At great expense the Government had to supply the people with water by boats. It was very expensive. At the present time the officials in charge of the immigrant station in New York are distributing the contagious-disease cases in the various hospitals in the city of New York, and last year paid out over $90,000 on account of not being able to treat them in our own hospitals, and the conditions are such at that port that it makes it absolutely necessary that they shall have relief at the earliest possible moment. If the gentleman will take the testimony and read the statement of the Commissioner-General at New York, I am satisfied he would not hesitate a moment to say that this is absolutely urgent and absolutely necessary.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. The statement is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14766 and had come to no resolution thereon.

[Senate Document No. 212, 60th Congress, 1st Session.]

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 21, 1908.

GENTLEMEN: In connection with the proposition that the Government should accept railroad bonds as a part of the securities required from national banks for additional circulating notes, I would be glad if you would advise me.

First, what has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to a prescribed system of railroad accounts?

Second, what principles or rules have been promulgated in the orders of the Commission thus far issued relative to operating accounts, and what principles or rules are under advisement pertaining to capital accounts, to be covered by subsequent orders of the Commission, that will tend to give security and stability to railway securities?

Third, what has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to the appointment of a board of special examiners into railway accounts?

Fourth, would it be possible, in your opinion, after the various provisions of the twentieth section shall have been carried into effect, for the Secretary of the Treasury, from the records in the possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to select classes of bonds which it would be safe for the Government to accept as security for the ultimate payment of these circulating notes?

Very truly, yours,

NELSON W. ALDRICH.

The INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, January 29, 1908.

Hon. NELSON W. ALDRICH,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your communication of 21st instant, inquiring as to the action taken by the Commission under the twentieth section of the amended act to regulate commerce, relative to a prescribed system of railroad accounts, etc., was referred to Mr. Henry C. Adams, in charge of statistics and accounts, and a copy of his statement in response is submitted herewith.

This statement appears to cover fully the several matters embraced in your inquiry, and is transmitted as the reply of the Commission.

Very respectfully,

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
DIVISION OF STATISTICS AND ACCOUNTS,
Washington, January 28, 1908.

Hon. MARTIN A. KNAPP,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request in connection with the letter of the 21st instant from Senator ALDRICH, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, I submit the following:

It is assumed that answers to the questions contained in the letter of Senator ALDRICH should be limited to the purpose for which they are asked, namely, to learn what added security, if any, will be given to railway stocks and railway bonds as the result of an efficient administration of the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended. Any other interpretation would oblige the Commission to cover in its reply a large amount of irrelevant matter.

The questions submitted will be considered in the order of their presentation, the first of these being—

"What has been done, under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to a prescribed system of railway accounts?"

Before answering this question a word may not be inappropriate relative to the purpose of the twentieth section, to which the question makes reference. This section makes provision for:

I. Annual, monthly, and special reports.

II. A prescribed system of accounts, uniform for all transportation agencies subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

III. The employment of "special agents and examiners, who shall have authority * * * to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda kept" by carriers subject to jurisdiction.

The text of the twentieth section makes plain the purposes of Congress, and the Commission, in making provision for its administration, has undertaken, among other things, to establish such supervisory control over railway accounts as to enable anyone interested to distinguish between a carrier whose operating and financial conditions are sound and a carrier whose operating and financial conditions are not sound.

Annual reports have been rendered by the carriers and compiled by the Commission since 1888, but prior to the amended act of June 29, 1906, the Commission was not in a position to assure a uniform interpretation of the items reported, whether by different carriers or by the same carrier from year to year. It is evident, if annual reports are to serve a practical purpose, that they should be made with a common understanding of the terms used, and rest upon a uniform system of accounts. This is only possible where the rules of accounting have the authority of law, from which it may be concluded that a system of prescribed accounts having been established the annual reports will assume a significance which heretofore they have not borne, especially from the point of view of judicious discrimination relative to railway securities.

Regular monthly reports of revenues and expenses have been filed by the carriers since July 1, 1907. These reports are made under oath, which oath states that they are compiled "according to the accounting rules promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to operating accounts." These monthly reports are regarded by the Commission as "public documents" under the law, and as such are filed in duplicate, one set being open for the inspection of the public in a room specially arranged for this purpose. Furthermore, the division in charge of the compilation of monthly reports is instructed to place in the hands of the representatives of the press, or of any others interested, at the close of each day a compilation of all reports received by or before 3 o'clock of the afternoon of that day. It is evident that information of this sort, universally rendered by the carriers and regularly published by the Commission month by month, must, from the nature of the case, tend to establish and perpetuate a stable value for railway securities.

The special reports cover special investigations. The most important of the investigations of this class which have been undertaken since the enactment of the law is an investigation into the intercorporate relations of carriers as reflected in the intercorporate ownership of railway securities. The chief aim of the investigation was to enable this office to eliminate from its compilations such railway securities as were reported as outstanding, in so far as they were the property of other carriers and made the basis of other issues. This investigation is now practically completed and shows that the amount of stocks and bonds heretofore reported as outstanding in the hands of the public will be reduced nearly $10,000 per mile. Prior to the amendment of the twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act, it was not possible for this office to obtain from the carriers the data necessary to an accurate statement of railway capital. This, however, is no longer the case, and reference is here made to the special investigations into intercorporate relations for the reason that it illustrates that the Commission is now in the possession of the authority and of the machinery to obtain whatever information is necessary to warrant a discriminating opinion relative to the value of railway securities.

Two other special investigations have been set on foot, both of which aim to protect the property accounts. These are an investigation into the manner in which carriers have treated depreciation during the six months ending December 31, 1907, and an investigation into the record of cars and locomotives retired during the past five years. All of these matters relating to annual, monthly, and special reports are pertinent to the question in hand, for they tend to the establishment of stable conditions for railway securities.

The work of formulating a system of accounts was begun in August, 1906, and in June, 1907, the operating accounts for steam carriers were issued. These operating accounts cover six classifications, and it should be understood that the rules of accounting which, under the law, become binding upon the carriers when promulgated under order of the Commission are expressed in the text explanatory of the primary accounts for which the classifications provide. The six classifications referred to are as follows:

1. Classification of operating expenses.
2. Classification of operating revenues.
3. Classification of expenditures for road and equipment.
4. Classification of locomotive-miles, car-miles, and train-miles.
5. Classification of additions and betterments, and
6. Classification of outside operations.

Of the above classifications, those from 1 to 4 were issued under order of the Commission dated June 3, 1907; the others were issued under circulars of instruction, and in the main have been followed by the carriers. After revision they will be submitted to the Commission for promulgation under order to take effect July 1, 1908.

A complete system of railway accounting must be made to cover the property and the capital accounts; that is to say, there must be an authoritative classification of the items entering into an income account, the purpose of which is to arrive at a correct statement of the surplus (or deficit) resulting from the year's operations, and an authoritative classification of the items entering into a balance-sheet statement, the purpose of which is to arrive at a correct statement of the accumulated surplus or accumulated deficit resulting from the manner in which the property has been managed from the beginning. The formulation of an income account and of a balance sheet is well under way, and will be submitted to the Commission for promulgation under order in time to take effect July 1, 1908.

The second question submitted is as follows:

"What principles or rules have been promulgated in the orders of the Commission thus far issued relative to operating accounts, and what principles or rules are under advisement pertaining to capital accounts to be covered by subsequent orders of the Commission that will tend to give security and stability to railway securities?"

What follows treats the accounting system as a unit. No difference will be made between principles that have been promulgated under order and those which are to be promulgated. The entire scheme of accounting, so far as the main primary accounts are concerned, will become effective July 1, 1908.

Of the general principles embodied in this scheme of accounting, there are four of especial pertinence to the matter under consideration because of the relation they sustain to the conditions under which stocks and bonds are likely to show stability of value. These principles are:

1. That discount on securities is not an item properly included in the cost of property.

2. That depreciation is an element of operating cost, and should be included in operating expenses.

3. That betterments and additions are not elements of operating cost, and should be charged to income or to capital.

4. That the total of assets and the total of liabilities should be shown upon the balance sheet, and that "profit and loss" should be so analyzed as to state separately the different items covered.

The first of the principles above named pertains, so far as the present influence of the Commission is concerned, to the future rather than to the present, and even for the future its full significance as suggesting practical rules of administration pertains primarily to a commission having authority to supervise railway capitalization. It is important, however, as bearing upon the question in hand, to know that the construction accounts promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and adopted by most of the States, propose to open the balance-sheet account with a cash statement of what it costs to create the property at one hundred cents on the dollar. The point to be noted is, that the system of railway accounting promulgated by the Commission has been drawn in view of the possibility that Congress may at some future time deem it wise to require an inventory valuation of railway property, and to authorize some form of supervisory control over capitalization, and the analysis which underlies the construction accounts as promulgated is an analysis which easily lends itself to this purpose, and for that reason readily suggests the character and the method of an investigation the object of which is to disclose what stocks and bonds do in fact possess a certain and a stable value.

The second and the third of the above principles may be considered together, for the "depreciation" accounts and the "additions and betterments" accounts are each complementary to the other. The purpose of a depreciation account is to guard against the overstatement of net revenue by failure to include all the costs of operation in operating expenses; while the purpose of the additions and betterments accounts is to guard against the understatement of net revenue by including in operating expenses as a cost of operation what in fact is an improvement to the property. Heretofore no uniform rule has controlled these charges. The executive officer, perhaps to make a showing, perhaps to influence the market (the purpose is not important) has believed it to be a prerogative of management to order the accountant to vary these charges from time to time, according to some special purpose or fancied exigency. Under such conditions it is not strange that railway stocks, and also to some extent railway bonds, have come to be regarded as speculative issues rather than investment securities. The tendency of the accounts promulgated by the Commission must be to steady the market for railway securities and to strengthen the credit of all sound enterprises. The twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce as amended is an important step in the development of supervisory administration. Under the new law, the accounts of the carriers are no longer a private matter. On the contrary, they are as completely subject to public control as are the accounts of the United States Treasury, and when the machinery for the realization of that control is perfected and put into successful operation there will arise a general confidence in railway securities which will give them a sure and stable value, provided the enterprise which they represent is a sound commercial enterprise.

The fourth principle above mentioned pertains to the balance sheet. As the test of the operating accounts is a correct statement of net revenue from operation, so the test of a balance sheet is a correct statement of the accumulated surplus.

It seems hardly appropriate to include in this cursory statement a consideration of all the many questions of detail that arise in connection with the balance sheet. In working out the general and supporting accounts for this most important statement, an accurate analysis of the items covered, of a strict interpretation of the words "assets" and "liabilities," a clear definition of "accruals," and entries so comprehensive that all important operating and financial transactions may be duly reflected, have from the outset been regarded as essential for a successful balance sheet. Moreover, the fact that public examiners must test this account has not been lost to view. A balance sheet, if correctly drawn, taken in connection with the operating accounts and the property accounts of a carrier, should furnish adequate information for testing the stability and certainty of underlying securities.

The third question is as follows:

"What has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to the appointment of a board of special examiners into railway accounts?"

The board of special examiners is the means proposed by Congress to make effective a prescribed system of railway accounts. In direct response to the question, it should be said that no board of examiners has as yet been formally organized. Ten special examiners have been appointed, but for the most part they have been engaged in investigations bearing upon the character of the accounts to be prescribed. With the exception of special examinations into claims and into the manner in which the depreciation accounts have been applied, no formal examinations, such as were contemplated by Congress, have been undertaken.

It will require the permanent employment of 260 men to enable the Commission to exercise administrative supervision over the accounts of steam railways. The Civil Service Commission has provided, through special examination, a roster from which perhaps half of this number of men may be secured, and a new examination will be undertaken when necessary. A programme for the organization of a board of examiners, including a plan for branch offices at certain selected railway centers and a set of instructions prescribing the manner in which these examinations shall be carried on, are sufficiently advanced to warrant the statement that this formal examination may be effectively begun on July 1, 1908, so far as this office is concerned. No further steps can be taken in this direction, however, until it is known what appropriation is to be placed at the disposal of the Commission for this purpose.

The fourth question is as follows:

"Would it be possible, in your opinion, after the various provisions of the twentieth section have been carried into effect, for the Secretary of the Treasury, from the records in the possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to select classes of bonds which it would be safe for the Government to accept as security for the ultimate payment of circulating notes?"

This is a question which should, of course, be answered by the Commission. As you have requested an expression of personal opinion upon this point, however, I may state that, so far as I can see, there is no reason why the Secretary of the Treasury, availing himself of the information collected by the Interstate Commerce Commission, obtained through its power of investigation conferred by law and through the exercise of its supervisory control over railway accounts by means of a board of examiners, for which the law provides, can not "select classes of bonds which it would be safe for the Government to accept as security for the ultimate payment of circulating notes."

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY C. ADAMS,
In Charge of Statistics and Accounts.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Finance Committee has submitted or intends to submit a formal report, then I ask leave, on behalf of the minority of that committee, that we shall have the privilege hereafter of filing our views. The minority, or at least a part of it, will offer at the proper time a substitute for the bill reported by the committee. Though I could have learned by inquiry before we left the committee room, I am now not advised whether the committee intends to submit a formal report in writing.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has not been customary here to do so. I expect to explain the measure when it is taken up as best I may in behalf of the committee. That will take the place, I suppose, of a formal report.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, it will not be necessary for the minority to reserve the privilege of filing their views, and they can state their views whenever they offer the substitute.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has been suggested to me that the correspondence which I have submitted this morning would be, perhaps, of wide interest, and I ask that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 21st instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

LEASING OF LAND BY INDIAN ALLOTTEES.

The bill (S. 1773) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yesterday, at the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], this bill was passed over in my absence and at my request. I desire at the proper time to discuss the bill and the amendment reported to it by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I desire to oppose the passage of the bill in its present form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 20, after the word "grazing," to strike out "or ten years for mining," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1891," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age or other disability any allottee under the provisions of said act or any other act or treaty can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by such Secretary for a term not exceeding three years for farming or grazing or ten years for mining purposes: Provided, That where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same or lands occupied by Indians on reservations created by Executive order or by legislative enactment, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes and are not desired for individual allotments, the same may be leased by authority of the council speaking for such Indians for a period not to exceed five years for grazing purposes in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge of such reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, to the bill as it was referred to the committee I have no objection. The purpose of the bill as it was introduced was to make the leasing system and practice uniform upon reservations that were created by act of Congress and reservations which were created by Executive order. So far as the bill accomplishes that purpose, I have no objection whatever to it, but the bill as reported after accomplishing that purpose changes the system of leasing upon all Indian reservations. It will be noticed on page 2 of the bill——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wyoming, as I understand, is addressing himself to Order of Business 94, which is Senate bill 1773.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. President, to the bill as referred to the committee, as I have said, there is no objection so far as I am concerned, but as reported from the committee the amendment in line 20, on page 2, strikes out the words "or ten years for mining," which absolutely prohibits the leasing for mining purposes on any Indian reservation of Indian lands that have not been allotted. I suppose that the committee struck out those words at this time in view of the fact that complaint has been made that the leasing privileges upon certain of the Indian reservations have been grossly abused and that parties who had received leases for long terms upon Indian reservations had strenuously fought before the committees of Congress and elsewhere any proposition to open those reservations. Of course, with any such action as that I have absolutely no sympathy.

Another phase of the question which is presented, Mr. President, is that upon many of these Indian reservations a large portion of the land is not suitable for agricultural purposes, but is suitable for mining purposes. It is essential, not only for the Indians themselves, but for the inhabitants of the States and for the nation that all our bona fide mining interests be exploited.

In my own State the Shoshone Indian Reservation, a portion of which has recently been opened to entry, lies almost exactly in the center of the State. We have reason to believe it contains large deposits, not only of the precious metals, but of oil, which is classed as a mineral. It is essential to the development of the country, it is essential to the welfare and the revenue of the Indians that this oil shall be prospected. This bill, as it is proposed to be amended, absolutely prohibits that, not only cutting off a necessary production of the State, but cutting off the Indians from any possible revenue from that portion of the reservation that has not been allotted; and the particular lands that are valuable for mineral purposes are absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes; so that they are still held in community.

I hope the committee which has reported this bill will recede from the amendment which they propose, in striking out the words indicated. My impression is, Mr. President, that since the law was passed originally the time limit of leases has been reduced to five years. If I am mistaken, I am subject to correction; but I believe now the land can be leased for five years under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. It may be that the committee, upon second thought, will not object to striking out those words.

Mr. CURTIS. The Interior Department, I think, has held that they have no right to make mineral leases upon Executive-order reservations.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, that may perhaps be true, but the Senator from Kansas will, I think, see the effect of striking out the words to which I have referred.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am in favor of opening all the existing Indian reservations allotting the lands to the Indians in severalty, and providing that the remaining lands shall be opened to settlement at the earliest possible day. I think the Indian reservation system is vicious and has resulted in very great abuses. Therefore I am opposed to any legislation which will tend to hold the Indian reservations in their present condition. I think that not only the bill which is now before the Senate for consideration, but the legislation which is proposed to be amended by it, had that tendency, and therefore I am opposed to it.

The bill proposes to amend section 3 of the act of Congress passed February 28, 1891, which act amended the act of Congress passed February 8, 1887. Section 3 of the act of 1891, among other things, provided:

That where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes, and are not desired for individual allotments, the same may be leased by authority of the council speaking for such Indians, for a period not to exceed five years for grazing, or ten years for mining purposes in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge of such reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Indian Bureau has interpreted that law to apply practically to all Indian reservations, with the exception of those created by Executive order. I think the interpretation of the Indian Bureau in that respect is wrong, and perhaps the interpretation, rather than the law itself, is what has led to these abuses.

The Senate will observe that the language here is carefully selected. It is where lands have been "bought and paid for," not lands which are "owned" by the Indians, but lands which have been "bought and paid" for, implying clearly that there shall have been such a transaction; that the Government acting upon one side shall have sold the lands; that the Indians acting upon the other side shall have bought the lands; and that there shall have been an actual payment for them. There are such lands. There are lands of that character in the former Indian Territory. I call to mind a case where the Cherokees had purchased for a sum of money, namely, $500,000, a tract of land held by the Indians in common in the Indian Territory.

Now, we go back a moment to the language of this law, and it will be seen that the interpretation of the Indian Bureau is altogether too broad. The circumstances leading up to its enactment are instructive. It came about in this way: In 1884 and 1885 there was a great deal of agitation in the country with reference to an attempt on the part of the Indians in the Indian Territory to make leases of their lands. The Attorney-General, at that time Mr. Garland, was appealed to on the subject, and Mr. Garland very properly held that the Indians, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States, had no power to make any leases of any lands whatsoever, no matter by what title they might be held. Later, along in 1888 and 1889, leases were actually made by those Indians. The attention of President Harrison was called to the condition of affairs. He referred the question to the then Attorney-General, Mr. Miller. Mr. Miller rendered an opinion concurring with the opinion formerly rendered by Mr. Garland, holding that these leases were absolutely void. An order was issued directing the holders of these leases to remove their cattle from the land within a period of sixty days and declaring the leases to be absolutely void. At the very time that the legislation was pending in Congress, or perhaps within a few months afterwards, the original bill, as it was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs and passed by the Senate, provided that "Indian lands" might be leased—not Indian lands "bought and paid for," but "Indian lands." The bill went to the House of Representatives in that form, and in that form the bill was passed by the House. The bill went to conference, and when it came out of conference the words "Indian lands" had been stricken out and the language "lands bought and paid for" had been inserted. I have no doubt that the committee of conference, and the Congress, in adopting the report of the conference committee, recognized that it was an injustice, in cases where the Indians had actually bought and paid for their lands and held them in fee simple, that there should not be some method by which they could be leased and the Indians be enabled to get a revenue from them. But it was never intended by this legislation that all Indian reservations should be subjected to the provisions of this law. I doubt, if at that time it had been so understood, that the bill would have passed either House of Congress.

In my own State it has worked very grave abuses. The Indian Bureau has held that the language "bought and paid for" applied to reservations which had simply been carved out of the great body of the public lands by legislative enactment, and which the Indians had not in any manner bought and paid for. The result has been that leases of this character have been issued to speculators, who have gone out on these Indian reservations and exploited them. This has led to scandal and abuse in connection with the subject. The people to whom the leases were granted have been interested in keeping the reservations from being opened, and they have sent lobbies down here to Congress in order to prevent them from being opened. The Uinta Reservation in my State, by efforts of that character, was kept from being opened for a period of ten years.

I am not in favor of passing any law that will result in a repetition of that kind of abuse. I think we ought to facilitate the opening of these reservations and that we ought not to pass any legislation that will in any manner interfere with their being opened at the earliest possible date. For that reason I am opposed to the pending bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the purpose of this legislation is clearly indicated by the provisions of the bill itself. The present law allows the leasing of Indian allotments for grazing and for mining purposes when the allotments can not be used for the benefit of the Indians by occupation or cultivation. As explained by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], a distinction was drawn and an opinion was rendered by the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department in regard to the provision in the law of 1891 relative to the meaning of the limitation "bought and paid for." The holding by the Department was that that applied to reservations made by treaty or reservations which had been permanently occupied by Indian tribes. It was thought by the Department that there should be no distinction held between reservations occupied by Indians under treaty and reservations created by Executive order or by law.

The purpose of the bill as introduced was to place all Indian reservations upon the same basis; so that, in addition to the leasing of allotments either for grazing or for mining purposes, the surplus lands of the Indian reservations not needed by the Indians might be leased by an Indian council speaking for the tribe and through such regulations as might be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, not only for grazing, but for mining purposes. That was the purpose of the proposed legislation as originally introduced. The proposed legislation has been favored by the Interior Department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GAMBLE. Just a word, and I will conclude.

The bill was reported; but it was the judgment of the committee, especially as expressed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] as to certain objections made in regard, I think, to the Unita Reservation, where mining leases had been made which had resulted in the defeat of the opening of the reservation, that it might be wise, and in their judgment it was wise, that no authority should be given for the leasing of the surplus lands for mining purposes, but that the right should extend to the leasing of the reservations by treaty, by Executive order, or by law, for grazing purposes. That amendment was made by the committee itself. I think that is all I have to say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator a question. He says, as I understood, that it has been held by the Indian Department that the language "lands bought and paid for" has been applied to reservations which have not been "bought and paid for," but which have simply been carved out of the body of the public domain. That is correct, as I understand, is it not?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think that is so where the Indians occupy the reservation by treaty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; by treaty.

Mr. GAMBLE. Or where they have occupied it permanently and it is supposed the Indian tribe has a fee to the land.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. Now, what I want to submit to the Senator is this: The original Indian title is that of occupancy——

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is recognized upon all hands. When we, by treaty or otherwise, carve out of a large body of land, which is held by the Indians by this title of occupancy only, a smaller body by treaty or in any other way, by what process of reasoning does the Senator think that we have in any manner added to the title which the Indians have?

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not think we have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have conferred no additional title upon them?

Mr. GAMBLE. Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, if that be true, why are not all the Indian lands lands that have been "bought and paid for" as much as those which have been carved out of the main body of the Indian lands by treaty or otherwise? Yet the Department applies the provisions of the law to those bodies of land that have been carved out of the larger bodies without any additional title having been conferred upon the Indians, and excludes the general lands that have not been thus carved out.

Mr. GAMBLE. In reply, I think that in many cases reservations have been created by Executive order from public lands to which the Indians who were placed thereon claim no title, either by occupancy or otherwise; and frequently by law Indians have been assigned public lands which they have not occupied at all. That was the distinction drawn by the Assistant Attorney-General, a copy of whose report covering that particular question I have incorporated in the report of the committee which I have submitted on this bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any details of the experience the people of this country have had in the matter of leasing lands on Indian reservations, particularly in the extreme West. It is a chapter that nobody is very proud of and an experience that, it seems to me, ought to make us all very careful how we authorize generally the leasing of such lands.

In this bill, Mr. President, there appears to be an attempt to treat by Executive order lands as if they were the property of the Indians. They are not the property of the Indians and should receive entirely different treatment from that accorded to the lands that really do belong to the Indians.

This is entirely too important a bill to be considered under the five-minute rule. It involves very many questions, and it seems to me that it is a matter about which we ought to go pretty slow on and be pretty careful. Therefore I am going to object to the further consideration of the bill and ask that it go over under Rule IX, so that we may have an opportunity to have it taken up and properly considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill, and it will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 31, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The bills (H. R. 12678) for the widening of Twentieth street NW., District of Columbia, and (H. R. 11767) to provide for the extension of Kenyon street from Seventeenth street to Mount Pleasant street, and for the extension of Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, were erroneously referred to the House Calendar.

These bills provide for an appropriation of moneys out of the Treasury of the United States, and should have been referred to the Union Calendar. Therefore the reference of said bills will be changed.

The bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the House committee reported the Senate bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senate bill has been reported by the House committee and is now on the Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I thought the request was to discharge the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. The committee reported the Senate bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, INDIANA.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Indiana, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Grand Calumet River at a point in the city of Hammond, Lake County, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this unanimously reported?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is unanimously reported by the committee, but I want to propose a slight amendment, if consent be given, to add the words "or near" after the word "in," so that it will read "in or near the city of Hammond, Ind."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move that the words "or near" be inserted after the word "in" in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "in," insert the words "or near," so that it will read "at a point in or near the city of Hammond."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 3.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, I submit the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3 shall have authority to order such printing and binding as they may deem to be necessary connected with the business of said committee during this Congress.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent the reference of the bill (H. R. 446) appropriating $25,000 to build a road and bridge from Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, to Rossville, Ga., connecting parts of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, was changed from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14766—the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14766—the urgent deficiency bill—and the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill under the five minute rule.
The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES COURTS.

All expenses that may be incurred in the approaching trial of the case of the United States against Hyde, Dimond, Benson, and Schneider in the District of Columbia shall be chargeable wholly to the United States and be paid from the respective appropriations made for expenses of United States courts out of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to give notice, Mr. Chairman, that I shall propose an amendment to that paragraph. The estimate, as submitted to the Committee on Appropriations by the Department of Justice, was for the appropriation of something like $60,000 for expenses in the trial of these cases here in the District of Columbia, together with the recommendation that one half of that expense be borne by the District of Columbia and the remaining half by the Government of the United States.
These are conspiracy cases brought here in the District of Columbia for the reason, as the committee was informed by the Attorney-General, that the venue could not be laid anywhere else than in the District of Columbia. It seems the consummating act was committed here, and for that reason it is necessary that the venue in these cases should be laid here.
The witnesses, however, numbering anywhere from 100 to 150, will have to be brought from the State of California and other Western States. The expense of the trials will be very great in consequence of that fact. Your committee, in view of the character of the cases and in view of the enormous expense incident thereto, did not feel justified in placing any part of this burden on the District of Columbia, and, at the same time, the committee did not feel justified recommending a specific appropriation to defray the expenses of the trial of a specific case or several specific cases. The fact that the expense in these cases ought to be borne by the Government of the United States satisfied the committee that the proper thing to do would be to specifically authorize the payment of this expense out of the general appropriation for the Department of Justice, and that is the reason these particular cases have been specifically named.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to add one word further. In drafting this provision I think we perhaps used language that might be construed to cover the expense of the defendant as well as the expense of the Government, and I have an amendment to cure that, which I will offer at the proper time.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt that the present language would cover both.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will withdraw his point of order I will offer it now to perfect the text.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can have it read for information.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment which I propose be read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, in line 10, after the word "incur," insert "and otherwise chargeable to the United States and District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman from Minnesota will permit, as I understand it, the ordinary expenses of the courts of the District of Columbia are paid out of appropriations, so that one-half is charged to the General Government and one-half to the District revenues.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the law to-day and has been the law for only two years. That provision was carried in one of the appropriation bills passed at the first session of the last Congress. Prior to that time the Government of the United States paid all the expense of the courts here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Although the courts are mainly engaged in purely District business?

Mr. TAWNEY. True.

Mr. MANN. So that while the spirit of the compact, if you call it a compact, between the General Government and the District of Columbia was that each should pay half the expense, and while the expense was caused mainly by the District business, the Government paid the entire bill. We made a change in that respect. Does the gentleman think it advisable to go back to the old way, where the Government pays the expense and the District derives the benefit?

Mr. TAWNEY. Answering the gentleman's question I would say no, and I do not think that in recommending to the House the provision which we have recommended here in respect to these cases we are going back to the old plan of the Government paying the entire expenses of the court. This will not affect the law in the least, so far as the law provides that the court expenses here shall be borne equally by the Government and the District of Columbia. It affects it only in so far as this provision relates to these cases.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman inform us what is the total appropriation for this character of expenses for the year?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the courts of the District of Columbia? I would have to refer to the appropriation act. I have no data here.

Mr. MANN. It is quite a large sum of money.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the neighborhood of $100,000.

Mr. MANN. And most of that is expended upon cases which are purely local. Is not that the fact?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think so.

Mr. MANN. If we pay half of their local expenses, and then there comes one case where it is a Government case, does the gentleman not think it would be fair to let them pay half of the expense of the one case, when of the hundreds of cases we are paying half of their expense?

Mr. PAYNE. And are not the cases all local except this one that has been segregated in this bill?

Mr. MANN. This is local in that respect.

Mr. PAYNE. I say the cases are all local except what have been segregated in this bill. It seems to me that the vice of this thing is that every time there is a case they claim is a Government case and not a local case we will be asked to make this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It means that precisely. If we make the exception once, we will be asked to do it every time.

Mr. PAYNE. And by and by the precedent will be established and we will be asked to pay for the policemen around the White House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is true that practically all of the cases, not all of the business of the courts, but a great deal of the business of the courts in the District of Columbia, is confined to local business. There are patent cases in which the District of Columbia has no interest whatever, and there is a great deal of departmental work that is transacted by the local courts—the Federal courts—here in the District of Columbia; but I want to call the attention of Members to this fact, that in a territory that occupies practically the same relation to the Government that the District of Columbia does, the Government pays the expenses of maintaining the Federal courts there; pays all the expense of maintaining the Federal courts in the Territories, and in view of the fact that this is an exceptional case—perhaps no case like it will occur again in many years—where the cause of action arose almost entirely outside of the District of Columbia, and where, because of the mere technical fact that the act of conspiracy, in the judgment of the Attorney-General, was consummated here, and thus makes it appropriate and makes this the only proper venue in which the case may be brought—we felt that it was not exactly fair to the District of Columbia to impose upon the people of this District the burden of paying the expense of about $50,000, their share of the $50,000, that will be incurred in bringing witnesses here from the most remote parts of continental United States. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, the committee recommends that this expense be borne by the Government, and I would say, too, that when the Attorney-General was before the committee he himself conceded that it would not be fair or just to the District that one-half of this expense should be borne by the people of the District, because of the peculiarities of this cause.

Mr. PRINCE. Is there not some danger in this becoming a precedent by which the Department of Justice can bring its causes of action in the District and thereby cause considerable expense to the defendants, who may not be financially able to bring their witnesses from California in order to have a full and fair defense of their cases?

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman a lawyer?

Mr. PRINCE. Well, I worked at it a little. I understood the gentleman to say that a part of the case was outside of the District and that a technical point was here. Now, if a technical point is here and the real part of the case is outside, it seems to me that the venue is outside of the District.

Mr. TAWNEY. The technical point as to venue, in the judgment of the chief law officer of the United States Government, makes it absolutely necessary to bring the action here, and, in his judgment, the action can be brought nowhere except in the District of Columbia. If that was not the fact, the case would not have been brought here at all.

There is no question about that, because I will confess that at first I was impressed with the probability of these cases having been brought here for fear that, if they were tried in the community in which these defendants resided, the Department of Justice feared that they would not be as likely to succeed in securing conviction as they would if they were brought far away from their homes; but upon investigation and upon inquiry of the Attorney-General before the committee, he gave to the committee as his positive judgment and opinion that these cases could not be brought anywhere else except in the District of Columbia. They involve one of the greatest conspiracies that has yet been detected in connection with the disposition of the public domain. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of acres were involved in this alleged conspiracy. Whether there is a conspiracy or not I do not know and do not pretend to say. I am simply saying that the case is exclusively a United States case, and would not be brought in the District except for the mere fact that it is, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, necessary to bring the case here because the final act which consummated the conspiracy was committed here.

Mr. VREELAND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. VREELAND. Did not the hearing two years ago, when the law was changed apportioning one-half of the cost upon the District and one-half upon the Government, show that fully one-half of the court expenses of the District grew out of the fact that this is the capital of the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true.

Mr. MANN. All the expenses grow out of that fact. There would be no place here but for its being the capital; there is nothing else in the District.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman understands what I meant.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from New York means strictly and exclusively Federal business.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his point of order, as this is one of the most important cases in the opinion of the Department of Justice in the land-fraud cases. These defendants—at least Benson and Hyde—have been engaged for years in a systematic conspiracy to gobble up the public domain, and thus far have generally been able to get clear. These particular cases in comparison with some others that have been tried are manifestly of greater importance, and the Department of Justice claims, as I understand, that by reason of the fact that the final acts of conspiracy were consummated here, jurisdiction lies in the District of Columbia; therefore it would be a great misfortune if for any reason these defendants should escape trial, and it seems to me it is in the interest of public justice that Congress should give this appropriation, so there will be no question as to the trial of these defendants. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I must confess my opinion, which concurred with the chairman of the committee before hearing the Attorney-General that they were afraid to try these cases on the Pacific slope for the reason given by him, has not changed yet. They laid the foundation for moving these cases here when they went to the grand jury in this District when they ought to have gone to the grand juries of the counties where the parties lived. Now then, the District of Columbia is not interested in this matter one particle and the law dividing expenses between the General Government and the District of Columbia was enacted merely to cover litigation that arose in the District and in which the interests of the District were involved. There is nothing of that kind in these cases. These four cases have been brought from the Pacific slope to the District of Columbia and I defy any attorney in this House to look into it from its groundworks up and not say that these cases could have been and ought to have been brought on the Pacific slope.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it the opinion of the gentleman, then, that these indictments were found here and the cases brought here because the prosecuting officers of the Government thought they would be more apt to get a conviction here than on the Pacific slope?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is my candid opinion publicly expressed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order has been reserved and not yet made.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that in the event there is no appropriation made it simply prevents the trial of these cases in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman, which is, of course, by unanimous consent, the gentleman has the power and his committee has, because in that respect the committee would yield itself to his opinion and the House also, to make a deficiency appropriation if necessary for the purpose of paying these expenses.

It will not do for the gentleman to seek to avoid responsibility for the proper trial of this case by saying that this provision has gone out of the bill, because the law now provides a method for trying these cases, and if they lack the money the very distinguished committee presided over by this able chairman knows how to bring in an item for the deficiency.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I may suggest, the clause which has gone out does not appropriate in any event.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. TAWNEY. It makes a general appropriation available for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. That gives a new fund, and there is in the next item an appropriation of $40,000 which might remain in subject to be used for this purpose, and all that it would be necessary to do would be to say that half of it should be appropriated by the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The section under consideration provides:

All expenses that may be incurred in the approaching trial of the case of The United States against Hyde, Dimond, Benson, and Schneider, in the District of Columbia, shall be chargeable wholly to the United States and be paid from the respective appropriations made for expenses of United States courts out of the Treasury.

As the Chair understands, under existing law, all expenses in this trial will be chargeable one half to the District of Columbia and one half to the United States Government. This paragraph, therefore, is a change of existing law and is not in order upon a general appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the fiscal year 1907, $20,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice here $20,000 for special assistant district attorneys, and I understand the Department has a woman assistant district attorney, Mrs. Quackenboss; and I want to know if it is in the power of the chairman to tell me how much she is paid and why she has been employed. I think her chief business is investigating peonage cases North and South, and if the chairman has the data I would like very much to have it. Has he an itemized statement of how much each one of these assistants have been paid?

Mr. TAWNEY. Is she employed as an assistant attorney?

Mr. WEBB. I understand so, and is still in the employ of the Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not on this bill, but at the hearings on the legislative bill will be shown in detail the expenditure of all moneys on account of the employment of assistant district attorneys that have been employed and paid out of lump-sum appropriations heretofore. I have no recollection of there being any lady's name reported to the committee as assistant district attorney, and I therefore have no information and can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WEBB. I am quite sure there is such a woman in the employ of the Department, and I would like to know why she is employed and how much she has been paid, and whether or not the pay is included in this $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will address a letter to the Attorney-General and make his inquiry, I have no doubt he will get an accurate answer.

Mr. WEBB. There is a bill pending before the Judiciary Committee now asking for that, and we have not been able to get it through yet.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have no information. I did not know that there was a female district attorney on the roll.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know whether the fees of this special counsel are fixed by any rule or whether they are fixed in this case by special agreement between the Attorney-General and the counsel, or how they are arranged.

Mr. TAWNEY. The fees of the Assistant Attorney-General, paid out of lump-sum appropriations heretofore made, are fixed by the Attorney-General.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I mean the special counsel.

Mr. TAWNEY. I mean special counsel and Assistant Attorney-General. They have heretofore been employed and paid out of lump-sum appropriations.

Now, at the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations a year ago, the Attorney-General has submitted detailed estimates as to the number of assistant attorneys that will be required in his Department, the salary recommended in each case, and the salaries now paid in each particular case. There is one man who is recommended at an advanced salary, I think, of $250.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In special cases?

Mr. TAWNEY. In special cases, whose compensation is paid out of the $500,000 lump-sum appropriation made some years ago for the prosecution of antitrust cases.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And they are fixed by the Attorney-General?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are fixed by the Attorney-General, and it is proposed in that appropriation, when the sundry civil bill subcommittee commences their consideration of that, to have a detailed statement of all expenditures made out of that appropriation, so that the House will have full information regarding the number that have been employed, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman what is intended to be covered in this paragraph providing for payments of assistants to the Attorney-General and the United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney-General to aid in special cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. HAMLIN. I simply desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Wait until I answer the gentleman from Indiana. That is for assistants to the United States district attorneys that are employed upon the authority of the Attorney-General for the fiscal year 1907, $30,000, and that involves their service now.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. Section 5 refers not to assistants, but to United States district attorneys.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is for assistants both to the Attorney-General and to the United States district attorneys.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not been able to hear what the chairman of the committee has been stating, and he may have replied, but I would like to know how it happens that there is this deficit in the payment of salaries of the United States district attorneys and their regular assistants.

Mr. TAWNEY. These are not regular assistants.

Mr. HAMLIN. The language of the statute is "the regular assistants for the fiscal year." Now, I would like to know how it happens there is a deficiency in the appropriation for the payment of these salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible for the Department of Justice to estimate a year in advance the number of cases and the character of cases or their importance that will come up for consideration and action in any judicial district under the control of the United States district attorneys; and for that reason it was impossible, and Congress failed to appropriate a sufficient amount to meet these special cases under the several district attorneys in the Federal courts.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then this $60,000 is to be appropriated for special district attorneys?

Mr. TAWNEY. For special district attorneys in special cases, although the antitrust cases have been tried in Chicago and New York.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the language of this bill is "for regular assistant attorneys" and not specials.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, they have to have their assistants in special cases.

Mr. HAMLIN. But this is for the regular assistants, as I understand—that is, the regularly appointed assistant district attorneys. I understand the special attorneys are covered by another and different section.

Mr. MADDEN. I will state for the information of the gentleman that I am familiar with the office at Chicago, and I know that under that office we tried all the antitrust cases that have been tried in the last year, and all the great cases that are pending in the country are pending in the courts of that district. The men who were necessarily employed a year ago were obliged to be regularly employed by the Government, and yet they have had no appropriation made for their compensation the last year. The Chicago office has gotten to be the most important office in the United States, and part of the deficiency created in the office of the Attorney-General of the United States has reference to the accumulated work which necessitated the employment of regular assistant district attorneys in the Chicago office, and this appropriation is sought to be made in part for the payment of the debts created by the accumulation of business that had to be transacted for that office.

Mr. TAWNEY. The paragraph that the gentleman has been interrogating me on has not been reached. I thought the gentleman was interrogating me on lines 3 to 6, page 36. I find that the paragraph the gentleman refers to is contained in lines 11 to 13. That paragraph has not been reached, but when it is I will be glad to answer any question concerning it.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending paragraph is lines 7 and 8.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota one or two questions, solely for information. What has ever become of that celebrated statute we passed here, that made it a criminal offense for heads of Departments to exceed appropriations?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state for the information of the gentleman, that if he will read the statute he refers to, which is known as the "antideficiency law," he will observe that where there is an obligation created by statute authorizing and directing the Department to do a certain thing, and appropriations are made for the carrying out of that authorization, and the appropriation is insufficient for that purpose, the Department is authorized under the statute to go on and perform what the law makes it its duty to perform, and if in doing that they create a deficiency, such a case is excepted from the operation of the antideficiency law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, are there any items of that kind here?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; these are statutory obligations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now that we have up this question of district attorneys, I want to ask a question for information on that. How does it happen that the Administration goes on all the time appointing a lot of district attorneys who are incompetent to discharge the duties for which they are appointed?

Mr. TAWNEY. That question should be addressed to the Administration. I do not pretend to know, in the first place, that the district attorneys are incompetent, but if they are, I am not responsible for that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If they are competent, how does it happen that they have to have so many of these assistants?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because of the accumulation of business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If they were a little more industrious, maybe the business would not accumulate so much.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman had listened to the testimony presented by the United States district attorney for the district of New York and the testimony that was presented to the committee in behalf of the United States district attorney at Chicago, I am satisfied that he would not say that these men were either incompetent or that they were in any way neglecting their duties. They have been working all the time on some of the most important litigation ever carried on in our courts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question. Have you any information as to how much the emoluments of the district attorney in New York amount to?

Mr. TAWNEY. The receipts of that office last year were $49,000. That, however, does not go to the district attorney.

Mr. MADDEN. The district attorney receives $10,000 a year.

Mr. TAWNEY. He receives a salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does he not also get percentages——

Mr. TAWNEY. No; he gets no fees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute. Does he not also get fees or percentages on prosecutions in customs cases which go into his own pocket and run his emoluments up to $50,000, $60,000, $70,000, or $80,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. He did up to the last Congress, but the last Congress enacted a law repealing the provision of law under which these fees were applied to the district attorney. Last year the district attorney of New York collected in fines and turned into the United States Treasury $49,000, and since the repeal of the old law by the last Congress his compensation has been $10,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question. Has not this habit of extra prosecutors, or assistants, or whatever you are pleased to call them, grown very much within your time here and mine?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has, indeed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It grows every year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it has grown any in the last year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the district attorney in New York needs regular assistance and the district attorney in Chicago needs assistance, why not create those offices and put them on a salaried basis and let the thing move along in a regular way?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is exactly what we are doing now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. MANN. That is the proposition in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are some cases in which the Government has found it necessary to retain as counsel men practicing law who can not be obtained to work for the Government at a fixed salary. Their incomes from the practice of the law are too great. The men against whom they are competing in the litigation in which the Government is interested are the picked men of the bar of the country, and in some cases the Government has found it necessary to retain men of the highest standing to conduct some of the cases and to pay them compensation largely in excess of the statutory fees of assistants.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I do not know that I made myself clear a moment ago. The policy of employing assistant attorneys here in the city of Washington and paying them out of a lump sum has obtained up to now and will obtain up to the end of this fiscal year. At the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress the Attorney-General submitted for the next fiscal year specific estimates as to the number of special assistant attorneys and the salary to be paid to each, so that the legislative bill for the next fiscal year will carry appropriations specifically providing for the number, and also for the exact salary each shall receive. Now the policy of the Attorney-General, as he informs us, with respect to the employment of assistant attorneys outside of the city of Washington is being formulated by the Attorney-General and adopted along the same lines, as far as it is practicable in connection with the transaction of the public business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question. Have you any information—and if you have not, it may be the gentleman from Chicago has—as to whether the district attorney in Chicago is entitled to any percentage on that $29,000,000 fine against the Standard Oil Company, if it should ever, in the providence of God, be collected? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not entitled to a cent.

Mr. MADDEN. He has a stipulated salary, and his emoluments amount to that and nothing more.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman and myself were in error in regard to the paragraph about which I inquired when they said that we had not reached it. We have passed it. Does the gentleman object to returning to it that I may ask a question about it? What is meant by "for salaries for United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys?"

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman refers to a paragraph at the bottom of page 33, line 22.

Mr. HAMLIN. From line 20 to line 22.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the general provision simply stating the officers and the expenses for which the appropriations are made in the succeeding paragraph:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants for the fiscal years, as follows.

Mr. HAMLIN. How does it happen that there should be a deficit in the district attorneys' and regular assistants' salaries; can not they be computed in advance?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they can not.

Mr. HAMLIN. Why not?

Mr. TAWNEY. It covers salaries and traveling expenses and other expenses incident to the prosecution of the business away from home, and also clerical force in the office, and it is impossible to estimate for these specifically.

Mr. HAMLIN. If that be true, why does it not say for traveling expenses and other incidental expenses?

Mr. TAWNEY. The deficiency appropriations are always carried in identically the same language in which the original appropriation was made.

Mr. MANN. I think I can answer the gentleman also in a little different way. A few years ago we made an appropriation of $500,000 to prosecute the so-called "antitrust" cases. Last year we supplemented that with $200,000. That money is paid to special counsel, and there are now employed a number of special counsel under those appropriations. Every gentleman in the House will realize the fact that special counsel cost higher than regular lawyers, and the reason for putting in this item in the deficiency bill is because in the various district offices—and Chicago is one of them—they want to take some of the men off the roll as special counsel and put them on, so long as they are employed, as regular assistants, which will cost the Government less than is now being paid.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to say to the gentleman that the special counsel is provided for on page 36.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask him this question. He says a few years ago there was appropriated $500,000 for the prosecution of these so-called trusts, and he is correct in that statement. I believe the Attorney-General's report to the Fifty-eighth Congress showed that he had only expended $25,000 of the $500,000 appropriated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was under Mr. Knox's administration, and he didn't do much.

Mr. HAMLIN. What has been done with the other $475,000?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I am not on the Appropriation Committee. I do not keep track of that, but I know we have diverted a number of items of these appropriations, and we supplemented the original appropriation at the last session of Congress, or, as I remember it, during the last Congress. What has become of the money is a matter of easy ascertainment. The gentleman can ascertain it as well as I can; it is an open book in the Department. But I may say to the gentleman that at least since the present district attorney has been at Chicago no one has complained, so far as I know, except those who have been prosecuted, of any activity or lack of activity on his part, and that office has had a number of notable prosecutions and trials, and in a way which the gentleman I think is satisfied with, because so far they have all been decided in favor of the Government. It is not possible to do this work without the assistants, and, in my judgment, it is far better to have regular assistants, so long as the office is engaged in the work, than it is to employ special counsel, one man for this case and another man for that case, where, in all probability when you finish up the bills, they will amount to a great deal more than hiring one of the same men as a regular assistant.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the gentleman undertook to enlighten me upon that subject, and he stated that in addition to the $500,000 that was appropriated in the Fifty-seventh Congress for the prosecution of the trusts, there was also appropriated about $200,000 and perhaps $250,000 additional, which makes $750,000. I would like some gentleman on that side of the House to explain how this three-quarters of a million of dollars has been expended in the prosecution of trusts in this country. I believe that I can recall only one conviction, and that was of the Standard Oil Company in the city of Chicago this year.

Mr. MANN. I can recall a number of convictions of various railroad companies. There have been paid in fines in the city of Chicago a large sum of money, several hundred thousand dollars, as I now remember, in the last year.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman give me the names of the railroad companies?

Mr. MANN. The Santa Fe Railroad Company, the Burlington Railroad Company, the Alton Railroad Company, and various other companies which now have the cases appealed. The furniture trust was fined. Various other fines have been enforced and collected, I might say to the gentleman, besides those now on appeal.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask if the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company was not granted immunity by the Department of Justice this summer?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman is talking about one case, but that is not the only case in which the railroad companies have been involved.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that over $600,000 was imposed in fines in the city of New York alone.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman give me the amount of the fines collected by virtue of this prosecution?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that he will find that in the annual report of the Attorney-General, by districts.

Mr. TAWNEY. I repeat that over $600,000 was imposed in the city of New York alone, in the Federal courts.

Mr. HAMLIN. Has there been a case where any of the officers of these corporations or trusts have been imprisoned under this statute?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that in one of the cities of the gentleman's own state, Kansas City, two men were convicted and sentenced, as well as fined, for violating the antitrust law. Whether the cases have been appealed or not or they are serving their time, I do not know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have been appealed and reversed, and the parties let off.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they were fined only the other day and they are now serving their sentences.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the cases were appealed. They came back and they pleaded guilty——

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, what is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is before the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to strike out the last word. In reply to the gentleman's statement about the conviction in my own State, at Kansas City, I desire to say I remember very well that case, and the prosecution against the chief officers of those companies was all dismissed, or they were all acquitted, and only the subordinates in these companies were convicted—some clerks who were not responsible for the affairs of the company and were made the scapegraces and convicted, and they never have been imprisoned actually for the offenses of which they were convicted.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish to be understood as saying that the men who were convicted were not responsible?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not saying that. I am only saying they were only subordinates and were not actually responsible for the conduct of the business, and perhaps ought not to have been convicted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can not but believe that the money that we have appropriated is being well used in finding evidence against "trusts." I happen, as you all know, to be keeping pretty close track of my old friend the enemy, the tobacco trust, and there has been expended between $80,000 and $100,000 alone in running down evidence against that octopus. That is one case. They have employed special counsel, a man whom I happen to know—he ran against me for Congress once.

Mr. MADDEN. He is all right, is he?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. What happened to him?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I defeated him. [Laughter.] But he is a gentleman, a fine lawyer, and absolutely unpurchasable. Mr. J. C. McReynolds is his name—born in Kentucky, educated in Nashville.

Mr. MANN. You did not want him to run against you again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is immaterial to me. I am very glad, however, to have given him a good client. He is getting, I am informed, $16,000 a year, and he is not allowed, I am informed, to do anything else; in fact, he could not do anything else but look after this tobacco trust, and he is doing it and apparently well. He has been in New York for the last twelve months and has been taking testimony, and he is now in Louisville, and is going to St. Louis in a few days, and then is going to Nashville, and then to other places to finish taking testimony which we have been trying to collect, I will say here, ever since I started it in 1904, or even earlier than that—in 1902. Mr. Chairman, this is being done in the Standard Oil case that Mr. Kellogg, a distinguished lawyer of Minnesota, is looking after. There may be similar cases. But what I am complaining about is acquitting the human beings that hound the American people and convicting the corporation that is without eyes to see, without ears to hear, without hearts to feel, without souls to damn.

Mr. TAWNEY. Who does that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The courts.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the jury, is it not?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the jury, too.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman know of any case where the court acquitted a man charged with a criminal offense?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell you in a minute.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you know of a case where the court has discharged a man accused of a crime?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will wait a minute, I will enlighten him, I think, a little on that point. Two gentlemen were convicted in Kansas City and fined and sentenced to several months' imprisonment by a very distinguished Federal judge, Smith McPherson, who you all remember as having been a Member of Congress. The case was appealed and the higher court reversed it on a "technical" point. The counsel a few days ago went into the court and plead guilty and they were both fined, but not imprisoned. The court said, so the papers stated, that rebating had been stopped, and therefore it was not necessary to put these men in jail. I am not here to criticise the court. I am just stating the press report of the action of that distinguished judge in this case, but I can not approve this action of the court. Now, here is the licorice branch of the tobacco trust, where human beings came into court and to Special Counsel Henry W. Taft, and said: "We will plead guilty if you will not put us in jail," and he declined, and very properly, and a jury acquitted them, but on the identical evidence and at the same time convicted the corporation, a machine they used to perpetrate the wrong on the people who used licorice in this country.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's criticism is addressed to the jury and not to the courts in our administration?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am speaking of the licorice case. As to Judge McPherson, I want to say I have as high a regard for the gentleman as a lawmaker and as a citizen as the gentleman has himself, even though they are both of the same political party. I think it was a mistake of Judge McPherson to do that even on the grounds on which he put it—rebating has stopped! These men were convicted and on a mere technicality the case was reversed and the "technicality" was so flimsy the lawyers came up and agreed to plead and did plead guilty, and they were fined, and the court, in substance, said: "I will not imprison you; rebating has stopped; I will fine you," and did so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman really want to say he has so much confidence in Judge McPherson that he would rather take Judge McPherson's opinion after he had heard the evidence than to have the gentleman form an opinion himself without hearing the evidence?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On the evidence heard before Judge McPherson and a jury the jury convicted and he sentenced them, and they appealed.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman himself did not hear the evidence.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The judge sentenced them and fined them. The superior court reversed it upon a mere technicality, and the paper stated that counsel came in and said that they pleaded guilty, and asked the court simply to fine, and the court did so, though he had both fined and sentenced them in the first trial, when the jury found them guilty.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman thoroughly familiar with that case?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am telling the gentleman of the press reports of last week in the Washington Star, and, I think, in the Washington Times, and in several other papers. I am not criticising Judge McPherson, but condemn the unwisdom of letting a man off who had already been adjudged by the jury and judge as guilty and was fined and ordered to prison, and who, on a second trial, came up and admitted their guilt, and the same court simply fined them—relieved them of any jail sentence.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman, so far from these gentlemen being let off on a mere technicality——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what the papers stated.

Mr. MANN. They were finally convicted——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They plead guilty, and were fined only on second trial.

Mr. MANN. Well, convicted in the first place on a mere technicality, and then pleaded guilty, because guilty, upon a mere technicality.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I am not mistaken.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The case was reversed upon a technicality. The judgment of Judge McPherson was reversed on a mere technicality, but they confessed their guilt in the second trial.

Mr. MANN. The whole thing was just as technical as things can be under the law. The conviction was a technical conviction in regard to granting rebates—just as technical as a thing can be. That is what the rebate business is. Now, the judge thought, and I think there was, absolutely, so far as these people were concerned, no moral obliquity. I think Judge McPherson did right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did he do right in the first instance, when he sentenced them to jail?

Mr. MANN. He did right to follow the opinion of the jury.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would not do Judge Smith McPherson any injustice any quicker than my friend would, and he would not do it at all. I am simply criticising the unwisdom of that kind of a judgment. Here is the jury that had convicted them, and the court refused to set the verdict aside, and not only that, but said that they should go to jail. This is reversed by the superior court on a mere technicality. Finally they came in and pleaded guilty—admitted their guilt—and the judge simply fined, but omitted to imprison. That is the substance of the press report.

Mr. MACON. In response to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] as to whether Judge McPherson did right in the first instance, he said that the jury fined them and imprisoned them six months in jail, and I want to say that the jury in a Federal court never fixes imprisonment. The court does that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The court fixes that, but when the jury found the parties guilty the court fined and sentenced them; but when they plead guilty in the second trial this same court simply fined them. In the license case the persons, the real doers of the wrong, were acquitted by the jury when they proposed to plead guilty, but convicted the corporation, which was fined, this fine to be paid, of course, out of the stockholders' would-be dividends. We must convict and imprison the officers and agents of corporations and the corporations, too.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did not the stockholders get the benefit of the rebates?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not presume that all the stockholders are knowingly guilty of rebating. But my friend from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL], as a matter of fact knows this, that many people have taken their money out of their pockets and are using it in an unlawful way to make money, and to such an extent, I am sorry to say, monopoly in this country has become more or less popular. The best talent and big salaries help to do this. We find reactionaries in the Republican party, and we find them in the Democratic party to a certain extent, and they are now trying to get a man for President who will go back on the record that Roosevelt and the Democrats have made against the trusts and monopolies in this country. I am not for any reactionary in this fight. I am for the supremacy of the law, its enforcement against the lawless, old and young; the lawless, rich and poor [applause], and I am not in favor of a man going around in the name of a corporation and robbing the American people, and then, when we bridle him and bring him up before the court, have him say that "the corporation did it. I was only an agent." He was an agent with his eyes open, and he ought to be sent to jail. [Applause.]

I will here insert as a part of my remarks the following article from the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., Saturday, January 25, 1908:

THOMAS REBATE CASE—SENTENCE IMPOSED TO-DAY IN THE FAMOUS SUIT—END OF LONG LEGAL FIGHT—BOTH OF THE DEFENDANTS ADMITTED THEIR GUILT—THEY HOPED FOR LENIENCY—JUDGE M'PHERSON, IN PASSING SENTENCE, SCORED THE PRISONERS AND THE PRACTICE HEAVILY.

KANSAS CITY, January 25, 1908.

George L. Thomas, a freight broker of New York City, and L. B. Taggart, his clerk, pleaded guilty in the United States district court here to-day to a charge of conspiring to pay rebates to shippers. Judge Smith McPherson then fined Thomas $7,000 and Taggart $4,000.

Both defendants were in court, and after sentence was passed checks covering the fines were tendered and accepted by the judge.

Thus ends the case against these men. Jail sentences imposed at a previous trial were omitted to-day. Those sentences were the first ever imposed for rebating. At the time Thomas and Taggart were first found guilty an appeal was taken and the verdict was reversed on the ground that the lower court had failed to instruct the jury on the presumption of the innocence of the defendants, a technical point.

DEALT WITH MANY SHIPPERS.

George L. Thomas maintained a brokerage office in New York, and represented practically all the important shippers on the Missouri and Mississippi rivers under a contract to route their freight from the East and to collect overcharges in freight bills. Thomas, with his clerk, L. B. Taggart, was indicted in December, 1905, charged with conspiring with Barton Brothers, wholesale shoe merchants of Kansas City, to pay rebates on the latter firm's shipments.

In the trial of the case it was brought out that Thomas had also agreed to secure rebates for other merchants. They were found guilty in 1906. Thomas, as the principal, was fined $6,000 and sentenced to serve four months in jail, and Taggart was fined $4,000 and sentenced to serve three months in jail.

An appeal was taken, with the result stated.

ASKED FOR COURT'S LENIENCY.

O. M. Spencer appeared for the defendants to-day and asked the leniency of the court for his clients, saying that although the first cases were reversed by the court of appeals there is little in that court's opinion to encourage the hope of a successful defense on a retrial.

The defendant had, he said, concluded to plead guilty and trust to the fairness of the court, in the light of all the circumstances surrounding the case, to impose only such punishment as is commensurate with the offense committed.

Judge McPherson, in passing sentence upon Thomas and Taggart, said:

JUDGE SCORES DEFENDANT.

"In the full belief that the vicious practices of these defendants and the payments of rebates have been stopped, and in the belief that the practice of rebating generally over the country has been brought to an end by the vigorous action of the Government, through the office of the United States attorney of this district, as well as other districts, there is no occasion for the order of imprisonment."

Judge McPherson took occasion to say that he believed the firms that accepted the rebates were as guilty as the defendants and the railroads, and that he had never been able to find why they had not been indicted by the grand jury. He would have liked, he said, to have had the members of these firms before him to-day, with power to pass sentence upon them. "The railroads," declared Judge McPherson, "are hounded to death with rebate seekers. They are not entirely to blame for all the rebating that has been done."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Appropriations Committee a question. I understand that the matter was referred to a while ago, but I was not in the House at the time. I would like to ask the gentleman how much of this money that is sought for the payment of special assistants goes into the prosecution of what are called "peonage cases" in Florida and other States in that section?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer the gentleman's question. There was no information given us on that subject. We had no information that any assistant was employed for that service. This only related to assistants employed in certain service where the appropriation was not sufficient during the fiscal year to meet the expenses of their salaries.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then it does not relate to any counsel employed in that way?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not so far as I know. Employment in those particular cases was not mentioned, and my understanding is that it relates to rebate cases and antitrust cases.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Entirely?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the House if it is for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of stock, $1,500.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the chairman of the committee to inform us what kind of stock is meant here.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say for the information of my friend from Pennsylvania, that the Government owns a farm of 150 acres in connection with the Reform School; these boys in the Reform School are engaged in working on that farm, and it is for the purpose of meeting these requirements that stock—cattle, horses, etc.—are used on the farm.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman have any objection to the insertion of the word "live" before the word "stock?" That word "stock" may be offensive to the readers of the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know of any objection. Personally I am not acquainted with the various distinctions between stock, as I was not affected by the recent stock panic. If the gentleman wishes to qualify the word "stock" I have no objections.

Mr. BUTLER. I know of both kinds.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know of neither.

Mr. BUTLER. I move, so that we may not be accused of wickedness on the ground of having to do with stocks other than those alive, to amend the paragraph so it will read "for the purchase of 'live' stock, $1,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 19, add before the word "stock" the word "live," so that it will read "live stock."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to address the committee further on his amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, it is truthfully stated that it is the purpose of the House to indulge in much speaking to the end that time may be thereby consumed. Therefore I decline to speak on my amendment, although to decline to speak may result in its defeat. [Laughter.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, exchange, and keeping of horses and wagons, and repair of wagons and harness, to be used only for official purposes, $1,250.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment on page 38, line 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For repair of roofs of Post-Office Department building, $2,890."

Mr. VREELAND. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that this is for repair of the roofs of the main Post-Office Department in this city. This statement was sent to the chairman of the committee too late to be printed in the appropriation bill. It seems a necessary item, as the roof is leaking and destroying property within. For this purpose it is necessary to have it incorporated in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel at Presidential post-offices, $50,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word, and I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill how it is that there has been so large an urgent deficiency as $750,000 for the compensation of clerks in the post-office.

Mr. VREELAND. I will say to the gentleman from New York that Congress at the last session, in the post-office appropriation bill, fixed the compensation of a large number of employees of the Government, among these being clerks in first and second class post-offices, postmasters and assistants, and other officials covered by the various items of this schedule. The great growth of the business of the Post-Office Department in the last year, the large number of increases of officials of this kind, whose salaries have been fixed by law heretofore, has made this emergency deficiency necessary. That is, we are simply carrying out directions of Congress in making this appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. That explanation extends to these large items?

Mr. VREELAND. All these large items are under the same explanation.

Mr. PERKINS. Were these increases after the estimates were made last year?

Mr. VREELAND. They were made by the post-office appropriation bill at the last Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. Could not an additional estimate for them have come in afterwards?

Mr. VREELAND. The estimates made were insufficient. They could not foresee the number of post-offices that would go from a lower to a higher class, thereby increasing the number of clerks made necessary by the act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, is not this the situation? We provided last year for what was called an automatic increase in the pay of the post-office clerks that depended upon whether the postmasters considered them efficient. If they were efficient they were increased in pay. Of course it was not practical for the Post-Office Department to determine in advance how many of these clerks would be found to be efficient.

As a matter of fact it is the universal testimony in the Post-Office Department that since that law went into effect, making this automatic increase for efficiency, the actual efficiency of the clerks in the Post-Office has very greatly increased, and the amount of work from the same number of clerks has vastly increased. The result was that when the 1st of July came these clerks, under the law, were entitled to an increase in salary, say from $600 to $800, or from $800 to $900, and this appropriation is to cover the increase which the law provided for.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations made for the construction of the Isthmian Canal in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 4, 1907, and in this act shall continue available until expended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the item for the Isthmian Canal in this bill is $12,178,000. When that is made available for use on the canal, there will have been appropriated and expended since the beginning of the work up to the present time, $141,787,468.58, of the $185,000,000 made available by the law creating the Canal Commission and authorizing the construction of the canal, as well as the purchase of the rights of the French and the $10,000,000 paid to the Republic of Panama.

The $10,000,000 paid to the Republic of Panama for the purchase of a strip 47 miles long and 10 miles wide, beginning at the Atlantic Ocean and extending to the Pacific Ocean, commonly known as the Canal Zone, was, in my judgment, an expenditure for which the Government of the United States received value. Over this Zone the United States has absolute jurisdiction in perpetuity.

In addition to the $10,000,000 paid to the Republic of Panama, the United States has agreed to pay $250,000 per annum, commencing in 1913. The investment is considered a good one, not so much on account of the value of the land for agricultural purposes as for the independent position in which its ownership places the United States. Were it not for this ownership the United States could not afford to build the canal at all, in my judgment. With such ownership it can afford not only to build it, but it will be thereby placed in such a strong position that it can very advantageously fortify and protect the canal, the opening of which will enable our Navy to perform double its present work.

Months are now required to pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and thousands of miles must be sailed through dangerous seas. The completion of the canal will bring the two oceans together, and Atlantic and Gulf ports will be within a week of the Pacific Ocean.

This condition will not only strengthen the naval force of the United States, but will increase America's commercial facilities and will enable this country to compete successfully for South American and oriental trade. It will place the ocean-going ships between San Francisco and the Atlantic ports in competition with the trans-continental railroads, making it possible to move the nation's products from East to West and from West to East at much lower rates than now prevail. It will bring the United States into closer business relations with the South American Republics, and strengthen the bonds of friendship which now exist between them.

In case of war with an Eastern power, supplies needed for the Navy can be moved from the Atlantic side to meet every requirement with economy and rapidity. Therefore, it seems to me that the purchase of the Canal Zone at the price paid was a bargain.

The $40,000,000 paid to the French for what rights they had on the Isthmus has been said to be an extravagant expenditure. I believe otherwise, after having been on the Isthmus and having looked over the ground and made an examination of what the United States received for the money paid. The railway and its equipment alone, with its exclusive right to control traffic between the two oceans, if there were no canal across the Isthmus and no canal was contemplated, would, I believe, be a bargain at the price paid.

I am convinced that the United States received value for every dollar it paid. In addition to the railroad, the French delivered to the United States all of the equipment used by them in the construction of the canal. While some of this equipment, it is true, was old and not of modern type, yet much of it is being successfully utilized and it is all of the first class.

The surveys made by the French are of great importance to the United States; indeed, without them, it would be years before we could hope to begin the work of constructing the canal. These surveys are found to be accurate, and are followed almost entirely in the work which is now being done. The difficulties under which the surveys were originally made were enormous, and the amount of money expended to secure the information which they contain was very large, and it is because of the accuracy of this information that the United States is now at work and moving dirt with a rapidity not dreamed of in the beginning by the canal's most enthusiastic advocates.

This is not all the United States received for the forty millions. During the number of years the French were at work on the Isthmus they expended $256,000,000 and excavated about 70,000,000 yards of material. The surveys show that 36,000,000 yards of this can be utilized by the United States in its work of building the canal. If this be true, it will be seen that the amount of excavation done by the French has saved the United States an expense equivalent to the $40,000,000 paid to them, for although it has been said that the work of excavation under the present force is costing but slightly in excess of 50 cents per cubic yard, the truth is that about $1.10 is what it costs. So it will be seen that the 36,000,000 yards excavated by the French and now being utilized by the Americans, at $1.10 per yard, amounts to substantially $40,000,000, or, exactly, $39,600,000.

But this is not all that the United States received for the forty millions paid the French. The French had constructed 2,265 houses and a large number of hosptal buildings, the cost of which is estimated at about $6,000,000. These were all included in the purchase. One thousand six hundred and fifty of these houses have been repaired and are now in use.

A vast amount of sanitary work was done by the French, and while it did not reach that stage of perfection to which the present management has attained the work done was of a very high order, and nothing that science had at that time discovered was left undone to provide for the health and comfort of the men employed on the Isthmus.

Since the Americans have taken possession of the Isthmus and have engaged in the work of building the canal $8,000,000 have been expended in the construction of houses for the accommodation of the men and women employed in the work, and a vast sum has been spent in improving the sanitary conditions of the Isthmus.

The streets of the cities of Panama and Colon have been sewered and paved by the United States forces, and contributions are made to the Panaman Government to keep them clean. Water supplies have been provided, and for the first time in history the people of these cities are provided with wholesome water, and at a nominal cost.

The amount of money expended by the United States for sanitation in Colon and Panama aggregates about $1,500,000. Under a contract recently entered into between the Panaman Government and the American authorities the United States is to operate for fifty years the waterworks which it constructed, and collect the water rents, out of which it is to retain the money expended for the paving and sewering of these cities and what it is estimated it will cost to maintain them during the fifty-year period, amounting, with interest, to $6,768,500.

The sanitary conditions of the Isthmus are perfect, or as nearly perfect as human ingenuity can make them. It would be as impossible for a case of yellow fever to occur on the Isthmus within the Zone as it would be for one to break out in New York. Not a fly or mosquito is allowed to live on the Zone, and, as it is acknowledged that yellow fever is the result of the bite of the mosquito already inoculated with the disease, it will be seen that if there are none of these mosquitoes no case of yellow fever can occur, unless the Zone authorities are lax in their quarantine regulations.

The climate on the Isthmus is not at all disagreeable. It is warm, but pleasant, and a man can do a good day's work every day without being more fatigued than he would be in most places in the United States during the summer season.

The work of the canal construction is divided into six divisions:

First. Colon dredging division, starting at the Atlantic coast, which includes all of the dredging and excavation between the deep water in the Caribbean Sea and the Gatun locks, a distance of 7 miles.

Second. The Gatun lock division, which is in charge of the Gatun lock construction, and the Porto Bello quarries, from which it is purposed to quarry the stone required in the construction of the locks.

Third. The Chagres River division, extending from the deep water in the Gatun Lake to the Chagres River near Bas Obispo. In this division about 13,000,000 yards of excavation will be required between the deep water of the lake and the outer lines of the channel for a distance of about 13 miles from Bohio to Bas Obispo, on account of the series of hills found there. This section of the canal crosses the Chagres River twenty-three times. At the breast of the dam the water in the lake will be about 85 feet deep. The area of the lake at the normal stage of water will be 164 square miles. The bottom of the canal will be 40 feet above mean sea level, and the water at the top of the lake will be at least 85 feet above mean sea level, and at the low stages of the Chagres at dry seasons it may be drawn down as low as 82 feet.

Fourth. The Culebra division, extending from Bas Obispo to Pedro Miguel locks, 9¼ miles.

Fifth. La Boca division, including the locks at Miraflores and Pedro Miguel.

Sixth. La Boca dredging division, including the dams and dredging on the Pacific side.

The width of the canal between San Pablo and Juan Grande, a distance of 3½ miles, is 800 feet at the bottom. Between Juan Grande and Bas Obispo, 3½ miles, it is to be 500 feet. From Bas Obispo to Las Cascadas, 2 miles, from top to bottom, 300 feet. Between Las Cascadas and Culebra, 4½ miles, 200 feet. Between Pedro Miguel and Culebra, 2 miles, 300 feet at the bottom.

The original cost of the locks, each being 1,000 feet long and 100 feet wide, was estimated at $50,000,000. Their increase to 110 feet in width, which has been recommended by the Canal Commission, the Secretary of War, and the President, will increase the cost to $60,000,000, or thereabouts.

On the 1st of November it was estimated that there were still 47,000,000 cubic yards of material to be removed from the Culebra Cut. Since the beginning of the work of excavation, the Americans have taken out 11,000,000 cubic yards. If this rate of progress can be maintained it will approximate 8,000,000 yards per annum, and require but little more than five years to complete the work in the Culebra Cut. But it is believed that much better progress can be made; in fact, much better progress is being made now, and there is no reason to believe that the work in the cut can not be finished in 4½ years from the 1st of January, 1908.

The Americans found the bottom of the canal at Bas Obispo 112 feet above the sea level and have, up to the present time, reduced that to 74 feet above the sea level, making 38 feet of excavation in the cut by the Americans since the work of construction began.

The Continental Divide is in the location of the Culebra Cut, and the bottom of the cut at this point, at present, is 167 feet above sea level, and as the bottom of the canal is to be 40 feet above the sea level, it will be seen that 127 feet of excavation is still necessary to complete the canal at this point.

The highest point in the Culebra hills, through which the canal is being cut, is 660 feet above the sea level, and the bottom of the cut at this point is at present 160 feet above the sea level.

Further on in the cut it was found that the French had excavated to a point 196 feet above the sea level, and the Americans have reduced this to 131 feet, showing that 65 feet of excavation has been made. Some places in the cut the work is within 20 feet of the bottom.

The present location of the railroad is in what will be the bottom of the lake for several miles, and it must on that account be relocated on higher ground. The work of filling the new bed for the railway is now in progress and well under way. In many cases there is a fill of 90 feet to be made. The estimated cost of removing the railway is $3,700,000. This is one of the elements of cost that was not considered by the Board of Consulting Engineers when they estimated the cost of the canal, nor was the amount of money expended and necessary to be expended for sanitation taken into account.

The locks on the Pacific side are to be constructed at Miraflores and Pedro Miguel. The Pedro Miguel locks will be 1,400 feet long, 350 feet wide and 75 feet deep, with approaches 1,400 feet at the north end and 1,500 feet at the south end, making a total of 4,300 feet, and will lower the vessels into La Boca Lake, which will be about 55 feet above mean sea level.

There are employed in the service of the Canal Commission at present in the canal work 284 locomotives, 2,250 cars, 181 steam and air drills, 63 steam shovels, 12 pile drivers, and the average amount of material being excavated monthly is 2,000,000 yards.

The number of men employed on the canal at present is 36,000. Six thousand are Americans, and they oecupy the important places in the management, including the positions requiring a mechanical knowledge.

Every person who has any knowledge of the situation now agrees that the canal can not be built for anything like what the board of engineers estimated its cost would be, and the general feeling is that the cost will be $250,000,000, and that if an attempt were made to build a sea-level canal (that such a thing could be successfully built many people doubt), the cost would reach at least $500,000,000, while the time required to build it would be more than double.

One of the most important things engaging the attention of those in charge of the work is the construction of the Gatun dam. More than 22,000,000 yards of material are required for this work. This dam is to be of earth construction, fortified by stone embankments at the toes of the dam. The dam at the bottom is to be three-fourths of a mile wide, and its total length is to be 1½ miles.

Each end of the dam is locked into a mountain range, which has been conveniently located by nature and forms two sides of the lake.

It is purposed to have a clay core 200 feet in width in the center of the dam. It is believed that a dam so constructed will be impossible of destruction. That it will be water-tight there can be no question. That it will be strong enough to withstand the weight of water behind it there is no doubt.

It is probably not generally understood that there are to be twelve locks—six locks at Gatun, four at Pedro Miguel, and two at Miraflores. Only one-half this number of locks would be required but for the fact that it has been decided to build them in pairs, so that ships can go in either direction simultaneously and at the same time to provide against accident.

It was originally intended to build the Pacific lock at La Boca, but for strategetical reasons it has been decided to change the location to Miraflores.

I have said that I thought it possible to do the excavating at Culebra Cut in four and one-half years. I think it can be done in less time than that, but the time required to complete the canal will depend upon how long it takes to build the dams and locks, for it must be understood that the progress made in the construction of the locks and dams will depend entirely upon the number of men who can be employed upon them, and since the space occupied by the locks and dams is the only space in which the men can be employed in connection with their construction, and since this space is limited by the size of the locks and the dams, it will be seen that only a limited number of men can be employed. Therefore, there is nothing to be gained by pushing the work on the canal prism faster than the work on the locks.

It is estimated that it will take about five years to complete the locks and dams. The work of excavation for the locks is now in progress, and the construction of the dams is under way. It is expected that all excavations for the locks will be completed by January 1, 1909, and that at that date the work of real construction can begin.

The work can be done more economically if it is carried forward with a view to completing the locks and the prism at the same time. The desire of the American public to have the work of excavation rushed has resulted in the formation of a more expensive organization than is necessary.

The chief engineer agrees with me that the force can be reduced and economies inaugurated without detriment to the work, and I think the time has come when sentiment should not be allowed to force the employment of more men than can be worked advantageously and with due regard to economy.

What I mean by economy is the production of the best results for the money spent. If the cost per unit can be reduced without delaying the work, that should be done. That it can be there is no doubt. But how? It is reasonable to suppose that if nothing is to be gained by completing the canal prism before the locks, only a sufficient force should be employed to produce that result. Such a force can be organized and operated more economically than the present one. Why? Because the greater force, with all of its high-paid managers, can not produce results in keeping with the outlay, while the smaller force, including the machinery, can be worked more advantageously, and consequently more economically.

The steam shovels, for example, are worked only 56 per cent of their efficiency, whereas they should work at least 80 per cent. It is obvious, therefore, that if 80 per cent of the efficiency of the steam shovels were obtained fewer shovels would be needed, and with fewer shovels the present train service could supply cars enough to increase the efficiency and thus reduce the cost without reducing the output. The shovels are under steam now during all of the working day, but they only work 56 per cent of the time because of the poor train service. It would be far better to cut down the large number of shovels and keep a smaller number employed. By doing this, as I have said, the expense could be largely reduced and no reduction made whatever in the quantity of material moved.

The working forces of the Isthmus are organized on scientific principles, but I am convinced that there are too many managers for the number of men employed in the ranks. That a large number of the managers could be dispensed with without affecting the efficiency of the force is the opinion of practical men who have given consideration to the subject.

Perhaps it is too much to expect the exercise of equal economy under Government management as would be practiced by private individuals in the conduct of such an enterprise. It may be that those in charge of the work are doing everything that could be reasonably expected of them. They are all gentlemen of high class. They thoroughly understand their business. They are very much interested in the work. They are anxious for the success of the enterprise, and I am convinced that if an economy which does not take away from the efficiency of the force can be pointed out to them they will gladly adopt it.

Colonel Goethals and his fellow-commissioners are vigilant and will, I am sure, do everything within their power to open the canal to the world's commerce at the earliest date possible. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Robert Coates for services rendered in caring for press members' lobby and the Speaker's clerk's room during the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, $140.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that paragraph. It is not authorized by law, and there are one or two others of the same class, and they all ought to come together.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would say that this man named in this bill was employed by the secretary to the Speaker, to take care of the press room during the last session of the last Congress on the east side of the House, and also the Speaker's room, as janitor. He has performed that service. There is another man that took care of the same room during the last session of the last Congress who is not provided for, for the reason that his services were not brought to the attention of the committee. I understood from the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] that he wanted the man who took care of these two rooms during the last session provided for also. If the gentleman from Maryland desires to provide for the man who took care of the rooms during the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, I have no objection at all to his offering an amendment for that purpose. There is no authority in law for the employment. It is necessary. The secretary to the Speaker informed me that because of the necessity and because there was no provision made or could be made by the doorkeeper, he simply directed that this man take care of the rooms referred to in this bill for last Congress.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction now over it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No. For this Congress the Doorkeeper is providing for this service.

Mr. MUDD. The Committee on Accounts would not be able to take cognizance of this?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it can not.

Mr. MUDD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order.

Mr. MUDD. I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as follows:

"To pay Robert H. Key for services rendered in caring for press members' lobby and the Speaker's clerk's room during second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, $60."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My attention has been called to an editorial that appeared recently in the New Haven Register, which reflects upon and is a gross insult to what is termed the "poor whites" of the South. The paper claims to get this information from Professor Giddings of the Columbia University. In the interest of truth and in behalf of a people who are not so much blessed with this world's goods, but who are rich in character, integrity, and race pride, I desire to insert in the RECORD and to include in my remarks an answer in the shape of an editorial which appears this morning in the Baltimore Sun, and which gives the facts as they are in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert the matter referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

[Baltimore Sun, January 30.]

RACE PURITY AMONG THE "POOR WHITES" OF THE SOUTH.

Our esteemed Connecticut contemporary, the New Haven Register, published a few days ago, under the caption "The disappearing negro," an editorial article which contains more misinformation, line for line, than we had conceived to be possible in a brief discussion of southern race problems, even in the most benighted quarters. The Register quotes an eminent "sociologist" of Columbia University to the effect that the negro is fast disappearing in the South because of the intermarriage of blacks and whites. If distinguished "sociologists" attached to institutions of learning are really as ignorant of conditions in the South as the Register's citation from Professor Giddings indicates, something may be said in extentuation of our New Haven contemporary's appalling lack of knowledge. But we find it difficult to believe that a Columbia University sociologist has "seriously declared" that intermarriage between blacks and whites exists in the South to such a degree that the "negro is fast disappearing." Any "sociologist," amateur or professional, who should make such a preposterous statement would advertise himself as a dangerous ignoramus, who ought never to go at large without a guardian. Nevertheless, upon the absurd conclusions attributed to Professor Giddings, our New Haven contemporary dilates in this fashion:

"The purest of the Africans, North and South, have a certain pride in their own race which keeps them from seeking intermarriage with the white. With many of them the mulatto is despised. This does not take into consideration the lower grade of blacks, especially in the South. Doubtless they will intermarry with the whites at every opportunity. But it is impossible to suppose that they find any alliances with any whites of the South outside of the class known as 'poor whites.' From what is known of this class, as it exists in the black belt, it could hardly be made any worse, and might be made better by intermixture with African blood."

We believe it is no exaggeration to assert that nowhere in the United States is the feeling of race pride and the instinct of race integrity more intense and more aggressive than among the so-called "poor whites" of the South. These people are the descendants of settlers of the purest English, Irish, and Scotch blood. The suggestion that they might be "made better by an intermixture with African blood" is not only foolish, but vicious. At any rate, our New England contemporary may rest assured that if there ever should be in this country miscegenation on a large scale it will probably be in Northern States, where intermarriages between whites and blacks are lawful and tolerated by public opinion—not in the South, where State laws prohibit such marriages. Moreover, we will venture the assertion that there are now more mixed marriages in Boston than there would ever be among the southern whites and blacks if prohibitory laws were repealed. Public opinion in the South is grievously misunderstood by our New Haven contemporary if it imagines that only prohibitory laws prevent miscegenation.

Our New Haven contemporary, having undertaken to enlighten its readers on race problems in the South, ought now to consult the best authorities on the subject. It will find, upon investigation, that the "poor whites" in the mountain regions of North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Alabama are a hospitable, sturdy people, despite their poverty, and that they need only the proper educational advantages to rise above an environment in which they are now unable to turn their innate virility to good account. It is the profound conviction of persons who have lived among them that if they should be given the opportunity which they richly deserve for instruction and development, they will take their place among the most useful elements of our population. It is undeniable that the Southern States need the generous and practical encouragement of northern philanthropists in solving this problem. Senator TILLMAN of South Carolina spoke very freely on this subject to Mr. John D. Rockefeller a few days ago. It is to be hoped that Mr. Rockefeller was deeply impressed, as he might well be, with the situation as presented by the South Carolina Senator. Meantime we trust our New Haven contemporary will get rid of the delusion that the "poor whites" of the South can be uplifted by an admixture of "African blood." They are of as pure a strain of Caucasian blood as the people of any other part of this country. Race purity is an instinct with them as well as a virtue and ideal. The fact that they have maintained their race integrity, although in immediate contact for a long period with the black race, is conclusive proof of their virility and their instinctive abhorrence of intermixture with an inferior race.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following police force for the Office Building of the House of Representatives for the balance of the fiscal year 1908, to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, namely: One captain at the rate of $1,600 per annum; three lieutenants at the rate of $1,200 each per annum; and thirty privates at the rate of $1,050 each per annum; in all $15,292, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOLLIDAY and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in explanation of this item simply this: In the proper conduct and management of the new House Office Building it is deemed necessary by the Commission, under whose supervision the building was erected and also by the officers of the House and Superintendent of the Capitol, that this building should be provided with a certain number of policemen just the same as we have policemen employed around the Capitol building. Now, it was originally proposed to appoint quite a number more policemen than this paragraph authorizes and at my request the original proposition was materially revised by the Superintendent of the Capitol and by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, who has control jointly with the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the Capitol police. They visited the building at my request and studied the situation carefully and reported by letter to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in their judgment the number of policemen provided for here was absolutely necessary to the management and for the maintenance of order and discipline in that building, and it is upon their recommendation that the item is carried in this bill. I would state that there are four floors in the building that must necessarily be policed part of the time each day. It was originally proposed to have three shifts, but that proposition has been modified so it will not require three full shifts every twenty-four hours as was originally contemplated. It simply involves the question, so far as the point of order is concerned, of the constitutional right of the House to control its own domestic affairs. There is no law specifically authorizing this employment any more than there is a law authorizing the employment of any of the Capitol police. It comes under our own immediate jurisdiction and supervision.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think no one wishes to prevent the employment of a sufficient number of men or a sufficient force to take the very best care of the new building. It may be possible that it will require a police force of thirty-four—that is, one to every ten Members of Congress—in the new building. A police force of thirty-four covers quite a good-size city.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you mean to say thirty-four are to be provided for this Office Building?

Mr. MANN. I say there are thirty-four provided for in this bill. At the present time the Superintendent of the Capitol building, who, under the direction of the House Commission is in charge of the building, is carrying on the work experimentally—the cleaning work and all that work experimentally—so that he may be able to inform the House as to what force will be required in the future. There are six entrances to the building. It may be possible that it will require one policeman at each entrance with a shift two or three times a day. I must confess that it does not seem to me, without pretending to determine the matter for the officials who have charge of the building, that it requires a police force of thirty-four to keep track of one office building. I have been in an office building all my professional life, sometimes with more tenants in it than this building, without any policeman at all.

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman from Illinois make a distinction between a private office building and a public building such as this?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. These employees, as I understand, are merely policemen to keep the peace. Now, if we put in other employees in proportionate numbers, will it not require thirty-four policemen to keep the peace between those employees?

Mr. MANN. I fear if we put in other employees in proportionate numbers they will be jammed so tight in the corridors they could not fight. In reply to the gentleman from Minnesota I will say I make a distinction between a public building and a private building. There are no thirty-four policemen in any building in the city of Washington, unless it is in the Capitol building, where they are so thick they sometimes stumble over each other. You will not find that number of policemen in the Treasury building; and the watchmen they have there are not paid such salaries. I understand perfectly well——

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is also aware that the Treasury is not open to the public after 2 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that is very true. If it were open to the public, it would not require watchmen to keep the public out. That is about all they do. Now, I will not say they will not require fifty policemen over there. But up to the present time, without any police, there has been no trouble in the Office Building, so far as I have heard, and it seems to me that before the House renders itself open to a criticism, which is sure to come if it makes the House Office Building simply a vehicle for obtaining patronage, that it ought to be very careful and give careful consideration. If we are to have policemen at every door, and several shifts a day perhaps, it will require one or two janitors for every room and charwomen for every square foot of the building. I am sure that that is not the intent of the House. While I have the greatest respect for the judgment of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Superintendent of the Capitol, who, I understand, recommended this number of policemen to the committee, I think they have done that without sufficient knowledge as to the workings in the Office Building, because they could not know in advance. As to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the paragraph is subject to a point of order, as would be any item to provide directly for an extra employee in the House, unless it had come from the proper committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to know how many policemen there are over there now?

Mr. MANN. We have no police there at all at present. The Office Building is being managed under the Superintendent of the Capitol by the aid of half a dozen or so men, who do the the work, reenforced by a charwoman force borrowed from the Congressional Library.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is nothing, then, to protect a man's belongings in his office except the lock in the office door?

Mr. MANN. There are these men that are on duty there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many does the gentleman think we should have for the new Office Building?

Mr. MANN. Of watchmen over there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Watchmen or policemen?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many we ought to have, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long before we are going to have them?

Mr. MANN. That, of course, depends on the House. I think myself that provision ought to be made for some watchmen or policemen over there at an early day, and I would be disposed, so far as I am concerned, after they have had an opportunity to consider the subject of watching the building, to take the judgment of the men who would have charge of the matter, who in this case are the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they say about it?

Mr. MANN. They have made the recommendation upon which this paragraph is based.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman thinks too many are proposed?

Mr. MANN. I think they have made the recommendation without sufficient knowledge of the subject.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think we had better reduce the number, and let us have somebody over there?

Mr. MANN. I do not see why the Committee on Accounts can not report to the House at any time a resolution—present the matter to the House, so that the House after investigation can determine the number.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, just one word. I do not suppose that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has taken into consideration the extent to which Congress provides for practically the same service in Department buildings, nor does he consider the character of the building, and the object and the purpose for which the Office Building is used. In the Treasury Department, a building in area about the same as the House Office Building, they have sixty-seven watchmen. These watchmen have the same power in regard to making arrests that police officers exercise, but they are designated as watchmen, and these men might be designated as watchmen, if it is the desire of the House to do so; but I think, in order to have the service uniform, the men employed in House Office Building ought to be under the control of the man who controls the police force of the Capitol, and for that reason they have been designated as policemen rather than as watchmen. Notwithstanding the difference in the character of the service, and besides that, it is unnecessary for me to discuss some phases of this proposition involving the necessity for service in this kind of a building. To a greater or less extent may be involved, not only the reputation or good name of individual Members, but of the entire House of Representatives. I think it is a matter of very serious moment to this House that we should at the earliest time possible provide for this service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman that it ought to be provided for, and provided for promptly, in order to preserve the property that is over there in those offices. I know I can not afford to lose some of the official papers that I have over there, laying aside possibly some personal things I might have in my office. I lock it promptly, but I can not lock it all the time. We all know it has got to be policed, and will be; but surely it will not take thirty-five policemen to do it. Great heavens!

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois, with considerable irony, stated that this would amount to one policeman to every ten men.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many does the officer who makes this suggestion recommend?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Superintendent of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, who has control of the Capitol police jointly with the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms, have recommended thirty-four—thirty policemen and four officers. Now, there are four floors in that building——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three shifts.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). And it is not possible——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three shifts—that is, one each eight hours. That is about ten men or more on each shift.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty policemen and four officers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I feel myself that the gentleman could take less than ten, if he was one of the ten, and police that building.

Mr. TAWNEY. But I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I would not serve in that capacity if there were fifty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Surely the gentleman from Tennessee does not expect to get a gentleman like the gentleman from Minnesota to serve as a policeman in that building?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it could be done if we had a few men over there who would do their duty just as faithfully as the gentleman from New York does his, and the gentleman from Minnesota does his.

Mr. TAWNEY. But this is a very large building. There are four corridors on each floor. Now, one man for each floor certainly would not furnish adeqnate protection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Give him a hickory stick and a dark lantern and make him walk. [Laughter.] Cut down the number to about ten for the present and see how that would do. That is the way I would manage a thing like this; do it the same way as they police all other big office buildings. This thing of talking about having thirty-two men to protect these premises is ridiculous. What in the name of God are our people going to think of Members of Congress. Better have a criminal court over there and be done with it. [Laughter.] Now, this is a matter that we can treat a little bit laughingly, possibly from my way of stating the facts, but you can not help believing that thirty-two are too many. I know we will have to have it policed, and I want it well policed, and so do we all; but it seems to me like we ought to reduce the number. I believe it could be cut down to ten or fifteen, or cut it down to a dozen and have the policeman walk and not sit. [Laughter.] There is too much sitting in this part of the world, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. You would have him talk.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I am sure I would if he could talk like the gentleman, until he talked himself into just as high a position as the gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I regret that I can not return the compliment of the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Something must be done to police that building, to keep the Republican party straight, and I think it ought to be done at once. [Laughter.]

Mr. POWERS. I do not think any man can take his own employees and take care of a building of this size with one-fourth the number asked for. But I want to ask in all seriousness if it will be necessary to have thirty-four men to supply the various fortunate gentlemen who are allowed places for appointees who are permitted to have places to do work here, and if this thirty-four, in addition to the number that they have at present, will go around? If it will, I have no objection to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that I am one of the unfortunate men who have not had a room assigned to me in that Office Building, and I am not familiar with the necessities over there, as I might otherwise be. I am relying on the judgment of the superintendent of the building, and the judgment of the Commission that supervised the construction of the building and has now charge of the management of it. It is upon their recommendation, together with the recommendation of the Sergeant-at-Arms, that the Committee on Appropriations have proposed this number of watchmen for this building; and the number that we are proposing is but one-half, and less than one-half, the number provided by law for the Treasury Department in the city of Washington.

I do not think that the number is excessive, and I think if any less number is provided now an additional number will be authorized before the close of this session of Congress, and the necessity for them will be recognized by the gentlemen who occupy rooms in this building.

Mr. POWERS. Then I understand the gentleman not only relies upon the judgment of these men who are to have charge, but upon his own judgment in determining that this number is necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. From the statements made by the Superintendent of the Capitol and by the Commission, consisting of the Speaker and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I base my judgment on their statements.

Mr. POWERS. And therefore, especially, because so large a number are used in other departments. We must have them.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; not entirely so.

Mr. POWERS. Is it not a fact that in order to furnish places, very largely, we have around this Capitol and in many other places, as caretakers and police, and one thing or another, twice the number of men that any person would employ who was attending to these duties as his own private affairs?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is undoubtedly true of all branches of the public service. It is true not alone of the legislative branch, but it is just as true of the executive branch. And that state of affairs is not confined to the Federal service alone, but applies to State service the same as it does to the Federal service.

Mr. POWERS. In these times, when we are trying to retrench, and when the revenues, as I understand, are falling below the required amount, would it not be well in this particular instance, unless there is some very pressing necessity to furnish places for the men who are behind this, to attempt at least to get along with a smaller number?

Mr. TAWNEY. At first it was proposed to get along until the end of the fiscal year, but with the occupancy of the building conditions arose demanding the earliest possible assignment of officers of this character to the building.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just one observation which comes to my mind. In one of the large hotels at my city of Nashville there are three or four stories, and a rotunda, which is very large; there is one policeman, who takes entire charge of that large hotel. He keeps good order, puts anybody out who gets drunk, settles all fights, and preserves the integrity and reputation of that splendid old hotel that was the Federal headquarters during the civil war. But he keeps moving, he does not stop. He has his lantern and his baton. I believe that is what you call it. Now, a while ago it was stated that thirty-three men were wanted over here, on four floors. I see that now the number is stated at thirty-four. What sort of men are you going to get? Where are you going to get them? Are they real men?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are not from Tennessee.

Mr. MANN. That is the trouble, isn't it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can take half a dozen men from Tennessee, and make even this House behave. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG. Can they make the gentleman from Tennessee behave?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to treat this matter promptly and seriously, and I think we ought to treat it thoroughly, but it looks to me like an absurdity to put thirty-four policemen over there to look after these offices. I have told you what one man does in Nashville, and he is not more than about 5 feet 10 inches high, just the ordinary Tennesseean, but a man of grit, of courage, of common sense, and very much of a gentleman, as much so as anybody in this House, and he does his work well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 4, on page 44, the word "thirty" and inserting the word "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that a point of order is pending, and that his amendment would not be in order until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that will be so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the House will indulge me a moment, I understood the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill to say that there were over thirty policemen down in the Treasury building.

Mr. TAWNEY. Sixty-seven watchmen, clothed with the power of policemen, clothed with the power of making arrests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; but think how many hundreds of millions of money there are up there.

Mr. MANN. What is the pay of these men?

Mr. TAWNEY. Seven hundred and twenty dollars a year.

Mr. MANN. Sixty dollars a month, and what is the pay here?

Mr. TAWNEY. The same as the Capitol police.

Mr. MANN. Ten hundred and fifty dollars. Up there it is $60 a month or $720 a year, and here it is $1,050 a year. Gentlemen will all be required to answer for the administration of the House Office Building. There has been no criticism by the public, and I think will not be any criticism, for providing offices for the Members of the House; but there will be just criticism if the House acts extravagantly in the management of the new building. There is absolutely no occasion, in my opinion, for thirty policemen over there. There ought to be some watchmen there. There must be some messengers sooner or later, and there must be some janitors. There must be various employees occupied in different directions in the new building for the comfort and benefit of the House, but the employment of thirty policemen seems to me would be simply for the benefit of the policemen who are employed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know how many policemen there are at the White House?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many there are at the White House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My impression is that there are twenty-one or twenty-two, and I wished to know if the gentleman had any knowledge whether that was taken into account in trying to ascertain how many would be required to take care of the building where the Members of the House are quartered?

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman intimates, I can see quite a distinction between guarding the White House grounds and Executive Mansion, where the Chief Magistrate resides and has his office, which requires guarding at all times of the day and night, and watching an office building which is to be used like other office buildings. We have office buildings in my town that accommodate four times the population that is to be accommodated in this building over here, and not a policeman and not more than half a dozen watchmen in it. I would not undertake to defend before my constituents a vote to employ thirty-four policemen to look out for a plain office building. Do they do anything else? No. Act as messengers? No. Now, Mr. Chairman, having called the matter to the attention of the House, taking an interest in the proposition because I have presented various reports in the distribution of rooms in the Office Building, and have tried in every possible way to provide for the comfort and protection of the Members of the House, I have no desire to put my own individual judgment against the judgment of men like the Sergeant-at-Arms and the superintendent of the Capitol police, whom I most highly respect; and while I do not agree with them at all, I do not desire to interpose a point of order, but leave it to the consideration of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Illinois think we should pay the policemen in the Office Building more than we pay those in the United States Treasury?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Tennessee wants to know what I think about it, I will tell him, although with some hesitation. I think a dozen or fifteen watchmen, at $60 a month, during the sessions of Congress, with three or four watchmen during the vacation season, is all that can be justified under any possible conditions for the control and protection of the new Office Building. Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The House has, of course, a right to employ such police force as it deems necessary for the Office Building, but it can not do so, as the Chair understands, in the first instance on a general appropriation bill, but authority must come through a resolution from the Committee on Accounts. The Chair understands that there is no law which authorizes the appropriation in this bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Distribution of card indexes: To enable the Librarian of Congress to secure the additional service necessary in connection with the distribution of card indexes and other publications of the Library, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, after line 13, insert:

"Printing and binding: For printing and binding the annual report of the Commissioner of Education for 1907, $20,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that since the action of the committee on this proposition, I have examined the matter and find that the note which accompanied the estimate in the first instance does not state the fact as it exists. The report of the Commissioner of Education for 1907 is now ready and may be printed at any time, but there is absolutely no money with which to print it. That results from the fact that there was an accumulation of reports when the present Commissioner came into office, and two reports were printed—had to be printed—in one year. Now, there is absolutely no appropriation for printing the 1907 report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The last appropriation is exhausted?

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return to page 23, lines 1 and 2, the provision respecting the tool and pattern shop in the navy-yard.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending to that offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], to strike out $50,000 and insert $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his amendment, and I will offer one in its place.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment and the gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 2, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "twenty-nine."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman was going to strike out also the words "and extension of annex."

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. I will also ask that that be added to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "and extension of annex" and the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-nine," so as to read:

For fittings and tools for pattern shop, $29,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the committee that this item was passed yesterday because of statements made on the floor by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in regard to this transaction that raised some question in my mind as to whether or not the facts had been properly presented to our committee. I find upon investigation that the committee was proceeding to some extent upon a misunderstanding of exactly what the facts were. The original appropriation made or carried in the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1905 was $39,000. That was for beginning or toward the construction of the building. In 1907, for the fiscal year, Congress appropriated $61,000 in addition to the $39,000 for the completion of the building. Then it was found that the Department wanted to build a larger building than could be erected under the total appropriation of $100,000, so that a contract was let for the building within the appropriation, but it included also the construction of an addition or a building of larger size on condition that the Department thereafter could secure an appropriation for that purpose. The appropriation which is carried for this amendment is admitted will be money sufficient to equip the building that was originally authorized and appropriated for with tools and patterns and all machinery necessary in the manufacture of patterns, and also automatic fire protection and a dust collector. Twenty-nine thousand dollars is estimated for that purpose, so that this will not delay or interfere with the work in the navy-yard in the least.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If I understand the gentleman, this will not dispense with the services of those skilled mechanics that the Government needs.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it will not dispense with the services of a single man. This will enable the Department to have the building which was originally provided for and authorized by Congress in commission by the 1st of July, so that the men may be taken out of the very undesirable shops in which they are at present working.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement briefly what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has said. I charged yesterday that, in my opinion, the antideficiency law had been violated by the Department. Technically perhaps that statement was incorrect, but there is no doubt that the Department deliberately provided for the construction of a building not authorized by Congress, and attempted by a piece of very skillful work to evade violating the law.

The so-called "antideficiency act" passed in 1906 provided—

That no person should involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of the appropriation, unless such contract or obligation was authorized by law.

The gentleman from Minnesota states, first, $39,200 was appropriated for a pattern shop for the department of steam engineering for the Portsmouth yard. That was in 1905. The Department took no action. In 1907 it asked for $61,400 additional in order to obtain a building of the character it desired. It advertised for bids. It obtained a bid to construct the building for $116,000, and it made a contract under which so much of the building as could be constructed for ninety-seven thousand and some hundred dollars should be built, and inserted a provision that if Congress would appropriate the additional money the building was to be completed in accordance with the plans; if Congress did not appropriate the additional money to complete the building, it was to remain in an uncompleted state with a temporary end to the uncompleted building. I wish to read a letter which is part of the contract entered into by the Navy Department with the contractors. The contract price for the portion of the building for which contract has been made is $97,930. The limit of cost was $100,600. On the date of May 28, 1907, the Acting Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks wrote this letter to the contractors:

Referring to your letter of the 24th instant, the Bureau hereby accepts your offer of April 26, 1907, to construct a pattern shop for steam engineering (building No. 95) at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., according to item No. 8 of the specification for the work, for the sum of $97,930, upon the condition and with the understanding that in case Congress at its next session appropriates sufficient funds to complete the building according to item No. 1 of the specification at the price bid by you for the item, you will construct the building according to item No. 1 of the specification for the sum of $116,980.

In case you construct the temporary end of this building under item No. 8 and are afterwards required to complete the building under item No. 1 the cost of constructing and removing the temporary end will be determined in accordance with paragraph 17 of the specification, and additional compensation allowed you therefor, and a reasonable extension of time granted for completion of the work. Upon this understanding a form of contract to cover the work will be prepared by the Bureau and forwarded to you for execution.

Very respectfully,

WM. M. SMITH,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, although Congress limited the cost of this building to $100,600, the Department deliberately planned and practically accepted a bid to construct a building for $116,000 and arranged that, in case Congress disapproved its act to make this unauthorized contract, the building would be left unfinished, with a corrugated iron end to it instead of a brick end, as contemplated by the plans.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if the contract was not within the amount authorized, absolutely?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, the contract for a part of the building; that was within the authorization.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The contract was for the amount that was authorized, with the provision that if they had something more appropriated by Congress they would receive it, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can quibble as he pleases——

Mr. SULLOWAY. It was limited absolutely and specifically.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will answer the gentleman fully, so there will be no misunderstanding. The plans provided for a pattern shop and for an annex to the pattern shop 100 feet in length. The contract provides for a building 40 feet in length, and if Congress does not give the additional money, instead of a brick end to the building, as the plans provide, a temporary corrugated iron end will be constructed, whereas if Congress does give the additional money this contract provides the building shall be completed the additional 60 feet, with a brick end, as required in the plans.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Who does that harm, may I ask the gentleman? Does it harm anybody but the contractor? If Congress thought it was a judicious appropriation and a wise and an economical thing to do, what right have you or myself or any other man to complain?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman seems to forget that the responsibility for authorization and actions rests, not upon every petty bureau official who desires not what Congress authorizes, but what he believes desirable; but the responsibility rests upon us. For the past dozen years these men in the Departments have absolutely disregarded the action of Congress in determining what should be done and have incurred obligations and expended money not in accordance with the authority of Congress, but in accordance with what they believed to be best for the service. There may be some difference of opinion between gentlemen in Departments and Members of Congress as to whether it is advisable to expend $90,000, $120,000, or $150,000 to construct a particular building, but it is time, let me say to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], that the men in the Departments awaken to the fact that when Congress decides that $90,000 is sufficient, they can only by violating a law which makes it a criminal offense incur an obligation to expend $120,000 for the building designed for the purpose.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman pardon me a second?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I wish to say that the gentleman can not put his finger upon anything, so far as I know, wherever there has been a contract made with reference to the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, that has not been authorized. Whatever may have happened in New York and in Brooklyn I am not speaking for here now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the gentleman seems to be afflicted with the idea that because this happens to be in Portsmouth there is some peculiar reason for exciting my opposition.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not at all. Portsmouth is not in my district, any more than Charleston or Norfolk. It happens to be in the State of Maine. I am a friend of the Navy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] will point out to me at any time a condition similar to this regarding the navy-yard at Brooklyn, I will offer an amendment on the floor to repeal the provision providing for the entire building, and I will ask the gentleman not to interpose a point of order against it. I say, regardless of where this is done, it is a flagrant violation of the law. It is a defiance of the will of Congress. It is on a par with the action of the Department of Agriculture a few years since, which, given authority to erect a building in this city at a certain cost, built two wings and left the center vacant, and then asked several million dollars additional with which to complete the building, and had the effrontery, just as these gentleman have in this case, to try to convince intelligent men that they had constructed a building, a complete building—two wings and no center—out of the money appropriated.

In this case these men simply have provided for building two-fifths of the building—a part of a building—and if Congress refuses the money they will wait until the gentleman from New Hampshire and myself have gone and forgotten this, and then they will come back and ask for additional money. If I had my way, I would put an effective stop to this, because I would turn out the man responsible for this contract, regardless of the position he occupies or of his previous service to the Government. The contract shows that in effect a building is contracted for in excess of the amount authorized. So anxious was some one to conceal the facts and to justify the action taken that four different reasons, and inconsistent reasons, are given to Congress to justify the appropriation. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to put in the RECORD these facts, not because it affects the Portsmouth yard, but because I believe that we should insist that these men should obey the law. We should, if possible, find some means of punishing those who disobey it. This appropriation as it will be given if the amendment be adopted, and to which I have no objection, will properly equip the building that Congress authorized and will not affect in any way the efficiency of the yard in which the gentleman is interested. I hope it will teach insolent bureau officials that they must conform to the will of Congress and not set themselves up in defiance of it.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for just a moment to permit me to return to the discussion which took place a little while ago in regard to the Benson-Dimond cases. It was intimated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] that these cases were transferred to the District of Columbia because the Department of Justice thought they would be more likely to procure a conviction in those cases here than in California.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from California will permit me. I said that so far as I was concerned, that while I had that impression at the beginning of the investigation, I was entirely convinced after a full hearing that such was not the fact.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman is right that he did so state. I did not hear the language when it was uttered in the House or I should have spoken of it then. But I want to state for the information of the committee and for the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia that these defendants have been indicted in the State of California for land frauds, and one of them has been tried and convicted—Benson—and sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a heavy fine. The others are still under indictment and will be tried, and I have no doubt that if the Department of Justice has the evidence to convict them the people of California will see that they get what is coming to them.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman why these cases were transferred to the District of Columbia?

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman can get his information from the parties in the Attorney-General's office who are responsible for bringing them here.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I endeavored to do so and could not.

Mr. HAYES. I simply desire to state, in justice to the people of California, that there is nothing in the suggestion that the Government could not secure a conviction in those cases, because the Department of Justice has already convicted one of the defendants in the California courts.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I reiterate what I said. They ought to go back and be tried there and not here at the expense of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAYES. They should be if possible; the gentleman is right. There was an insinuation that the defendants could not be convicted in California where the crimes were probably committed, and that is why they were brought to the District of Columbia. I am stating these facts in justice to the people of California and to show that there is nothing in that insinuation. I inform you that one has been convicted in California, and I have no doubt if the others are guilty, as reputed, and as to that I know nothing, they also will be convicted there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the bill has been concluded.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14766) and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

SPECIAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the employers' liability act, the experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Department of Justice in enforcing the interstate commerce and antitrust laws, and the gravely significant attitude toward the law and its administration recently adopted by certain heads of great corporations, render it desirable that there should be additional legislation as regards certain of the relations between labor and capital, and between the great corporations and the public.

The Supreme Court has decided the employers' liability law to be unconstitutional because its terms apply to employees engaged wholly in intrastate commerce as well as to employees engaged in interstate commerce. By a substantial majority the Court holds that the Congress has power to deal with the question in so far as interstate commerce is concerned.

As regards the employers' liability law, I advocate its immediate reenactment, limiting its scope so that it shall apply only to the class of cases as to which the Court says it can constitutionally apply, but strengthening its provisions within this scope. Interstate employment being thus covered by an adequate national law, the field of intrastate employment will be left to the action of the several States. With this clear definition of responsibility the States will undoubtedly give to the performance of their duty within their field the consideration the importance of the subject demands.

I also very urgently advise that a comprehensive act be passed providing for compensation by the Government to all employees injured in the Government service. Under the present law an injured workman in the employment of the Government has no remedy, and the entire burden of the accident falls on the helpless man, his wife, and his young children. This is an outrage. It is a matter of humiliation to the Nation that there should not be on our statute books provision to meet and partially to atone for cruel misfortune when it comes upon a man through no fault of his own while faithfully serving the public. In no other prominent industrial country in the world could such gross injustice occur; for almost all civilized nations have enacted legislation embodying the complete recognition of the principle which places the entire trade risk for industrial accidents (excluding, of course, accidents due to willful misconduct by the employee) on the industry as represented by the employer, which in this case is the Government. In all these countries the principle applies to the Government just as much as to the private employer. Under no circumstances should the injured employee or his surviving dependents be required to bring suit against the Government, nor should there be the requirement that in order to insure recovery negligence in some form on the part of the Government should be shown. Our proposition is not to confer a right of action upon the Government employee, but to secure him suitable provision against injuries received in the course of his employment. The burden of the trade risk should be placed upon the Government. Exactly as the workingman is entitled to his wages, so he should be entitled to indemnity for the injuries sustained in the natural course of his labor. The rates of compensation and the regulations for its payment should be specified in the law, and the machinery for determining the amount to be paid should in each case be provided in such manner that the employee is properly represented without expense to him. In other words, the compensation should be paid automatically, while the application of the law in the first instance should be vested in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The law should apply to all laborers, mechanics, and other civilian employees of the Government of the United States, including those in the service of the Panama Canal Commission and of the insular governments.

The same broad principle which should apply to the Government should ultimately be made applicable to all private employers. Where the nation has the power it should enact laws to this effect. Where the States alone have the power they should enact the laws. It is to be observed that an employers' liability law does not really mean mulcting employers in damages. It merely throws upon the employer the burden of accident insurance against injuries which are sure to occur. It requires him either to bear or to distribute through insurance the loss which can readily be borne when distributed, but which, if undistributed, bears with frightful hardship upon the unfortunate victim of accident. In theory, if wages were always freely and fairly adjusted, they would always include an allowance as against the risk of injury, just as certainly as the rate of interest for money includes an allowance for insurance against the risk of loss. In theory, if employees were all experienced business men, they would employ that part of their wages which is received because of the risk of injury to secure accident insurance. But as a matter of fact, it is not practical to expect that this will be done by the great body of employees. An employers' liability law makes it certain that it will be done, in effect, by the employer, and it will ultimately impose no real additional burden upon him.

There is a special bill to which I call your attention. Secretary Taft has urgently recommended the immediate passage of a law providing for compensation to employees of the Government injured in the work of the Isthmian Canal, and that $100,000 be appropriated for this purpose each year. I earnestly hope this will be done; and that a special bill be passed covering the case of Yardmaster Banton, who was injured nearly two years ago, while doing his duty. He is now helpless to support his wife and his three little boys.

I again call your attention to the need of some action in connection with the abuse of injunctions in labor cases. As regards the rights and wrongs of labor and capital, from blacklisting to boycotting, the whole subject is covered in admirable fashion by the report of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, which report should serve as a chart for the guidance of both legislative and executive officers. As regards injunctions, I can do little but repeat what I have said in my last message to the Congress. Even though it were possible, I should consider it most unwise to abolish the use of the process of injunction. It is necessary in order that the courts may maintain their own dignity and in order that they may in effective manner check disorder and violence. The judge who uses it cautiously and conservatively, but who, when the need arises, uses it fearlessly, confers the greatest service upon our people, and his preeminent usefulness as a public servant should be heartily recognized. But there is no question in my mind that it has sometimes been used heedlessly and unjustly, and that some of the injunctions issued inflict grave and occasionally irreparable wrong upon those enjoined.

It is all wrong to use the injunction to prevent the entirely proper and legitimate actions of labor organizations in their struggle for industrial betterment, or under the guise of protecting property rights unwarrantably to invade the fundamental rights of the individual. It is futile to concede, as we all do, the right and the necessity of organized effort on the part of wage-earners and yet by injunctive process to forbid peaceable action to accomplish the lawful objects for which they are organized and upon which their success depends. The fact that the punishment for the violation of an injunction must, to make the order effective, necessarily be summary and without the intervention of a jury makes its issuance in doubtful cases a dangerous practice, and in itself furnishes a reason why the process should be surrounded with safeguards to protect individuals against being enjoined from exercising their proper rights. Reasonable notice should be given the adverse party.

This matter is daily becoming of graver importance and I can not too urgently recommend that the Congress give careful consideration to the subject. If some way of remedying the abuses is not found the feeling of indignation against them among large numbers of our citizens will tend to grow so extreme as to produce a revolt against the whole use of the process of injunction. The ultra-conservatives who object to cutting out the abuses will do well to remember that if the popular feeling does become strong many of those upon whom they rely to defend them will be the first to turn against them. Men of property can not afford to trust to anything save the spirit of justice and fair play; for those very public men who, while it is to their interest, defend all the abuses committed by capital and pose as the champions of conservatism, will, the moment they think their interest changes, take the lead in just such a matter as this and pander to what they esteem popular feeling by endeavoring, for instance, effectively to destroy the power of the courts in matters of injunction; and will even seek to render nugatory the power to punish for contempt, upon which power the very existence of the orderly administration of justice depends.

It is my purpose as soon as may be to submit some further recommendations in reference to our laws regulating labor conditions within the sphere of Federal authority. A very recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered since this message was written, in the case of Adair v. United States, seemingly of far-reaching import and of very serious probable consequences, has modified the previously entertained views on the powers of the Congress in the premises to such a degree as to make necessary careful consideration of the opinions therein filed before it is possible definitely to decide in what way to call the matter to your attention.

Not only should there be action on certain laws affecting wage-earners; there should also be such action on laws better to secure control over the great business concerns engaged in interstate commerce, and especially over the great common carriers. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be empowered to pass upon any rate or practice on its own initiative. Moreover, it should be provided that whenever the Commission has reason to believe that a proposed advance in a rate ought not to be made without investigation, it should have authority to issue an order prohibiting the advance pending examination by the Commission.

I would not be understood as expressing an opinion that any or even a majority of these advances are improper. Many of the rates in this country have been abnormally low. The operating expenses of our railroads, notably the wages paid railroad employees, have greatly increased. These and other causes may in any given case justify an advance in rates, and if so the advance should be permitted and approved. But there may be, and doubtless are, cases where this is not true; and our law should be so framed that the Government, as the representative of the whole people, can protect the individual against unlawful exaction for the use of these public highways. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be provided with the means to make a physical valuation of any road as to which it deems this valuation necessary. In some form the Federal Government should exercise supervision over the financial operations of our interstate railroads. In no other way can justice be done between the private owners of those properties and the public which pay their charges. When once an inflated capitalization has gone upon the market and has become fixed in value, its existence must be recognized. As a practical matter it is then often absolutely necessary to take account of the thousands of innocent stockholders who have purchased their stock in good faith. The usual result of such inflation is therefore to impose upon the public an unnecessary but everlasting tax, while the innocent purchasers of the stock are also harmed and only a few speculators are benefited. Such wrongs when once accomplished can with difficulty be undone; but they can be prevented with safety and with justice. When combinations of interstate railways must obtain Government sanction; when it is no longer possible for an interstate railway to issue stock or bonds, save in the manner approved by the Federal Government; when that Government makes sure that the proceeds of every stock and bond issue go into the improvement of the property and not the enrichment of some individual or syndicate; when, whenever it becomes material for guidance in the regulative action of the Government, the physical value of one of these properties is determined and made known—there will be eliminated from railroad securities that element of uncertainty which lends to them their speculative quality and which has contributed much to the financial stress of the recent past.

I think that the Federal Government must also assume a certain measure of control over the physical operation of railways in the handling of interstate traffic. The Commission now has authority to establish through routes and joint rates. In order to make this provision effective and in order to promote in times of necessity the proper movement of traffic, I think it must also have authority to determine the conditions upon which cars shall be interchanged between different interstate railways. It is also probable that the Commission should have authority, in particular instances, to determine the schedule upon which perishable commodities shall be moved.

In this connection I desire to repeat my recommendation that railways be permitted to form traffic associations for the purpose of conferring about and agreeing upon rates, regulations, and practices affecting interstate business in which the members of the association are mutually interested. This does not mean that they should be given the right to pool their earnings or their traffic. The law requires that rates shall be so adjusted as not to discriminate between individuals, localities, or different species of traffic. Ordinarily, rates by all competing lines must be the same. As applied to practical conditions, the railway operations of this country can not be conducted according to law without what is equivalent to conference and agreement. The articles under which such associations operate should be approved by the Commission; all their operations should be open to public inspection; and the rates, regulations, and practices upon which they agree should be subject to disapproval by the Commission.

I urge this last provision with the same earnestness that I do the others. This country provides its railway facilities by private capital. Those facilities will not be adequate unless the capital employed is assured of just treatment and an adequate return. In fixing the charges of our railroads, I believe that, considering the interests of the public alone, it is better to allow too liberal rather than too scanty earnings, for, otherwise, there is grave danger that our railway development may not keep pace with the demand for transportation. But the fundamental idea that these railways are public highways must be recognized, and they must be open to the whole public upon equal terms and upon reasonable terms.

In reference to the Sherman antitrust law, I repeat the recommendations made in my message at the opening of the present Congress, as well as in my message to the previous Congress. The attempt in this law to provide in sweeping terms against all combinations of whatever character, if technically in restraint of trade as such restraint has been defined by the courts, must necessarily be either futile or mischievous, and sometimes both. The present law makes some combinations illegal, although they may be useful to the country. On the other hand, as to some huge combinations which are both noxious and illegal, even if the action undertaken against them under the law by the Government is successful, the result may be to work but a minimum benefit to the public. Even though the combination be broken up and a small measure of reform thereby produced, the real good aimed at can not be obtained, for such real good can come only by a thorough and continuing supervision over the acts of the combination in all its parts, so as to prevent stock watering, improper forms of competition, and, in short, wrongdoing generally. The law should correct that portion of the Sherman Act which prohibits all combinations of the character above described, whether they be reasonable or unreasonable; but this should be done only as part of a general scheme to provide for this effective and thoroughgoing supervision by the National Government of all the operations of the big interstate business concerns. Judge Hough, of New York, in his recent decision in the Harriman case, states that the Congress possesses the power to limit the interstate operations of corporations not complying with Federal safeguards against the recurrence of obnoxious practices, and to license those which afford the public adequate security against methods calculated to diminish solvency, and therefore efficiency and economy in interstate transportation. The judge adds that in these matters "the power of Congress is ample, though as yet not fruitful in results." It is very earnestly to be desired that either along the lines the judge indicates, or in some other way equally efficacious, the Congress may exercise the power which he holds it possesses.

Superficially it may seem that the laws, the passage of which I herein again advocate—for I have repeatedly advocated them before—are not connected. But in reality they are connected. Each and every one of these laws, if enacted, would represent part of the campaign against privilege, part of the campaign to make the class of great property holders realize that property has its duties no less than its rights. When the courts guarantee to the employer, as they should, the rights of the employer, and to property the rights of property, they should no less emphatically make it evident that they will exact from property and from the employer the duties which should necessarily accompany these rights; and hitherto our laws have failed in precisely this point of enforcing the performance of duty by the man of property toward the man who works for him, by the man of great wealth, especially if he uses that wealth in corporate form, toward the investor, the wage-worker, and the general public. The permanent failure of the man of property to fulfill his obligations would ultimately assure the wresting from him of the privileges which he is entitled to enjoy only if he recognizes the obligations accompanying them. Those who assume or share the responsibility for this failure are rendering but a poor service to the cause which they believe they champion.

I do not know whether it is possible, but if possible, it is certainly desirable, that in connection with measures to restrain stock watering and overcapitalization there should be measures taken to prevent at least the grosser forms of gambling in securities and commodities, such as making large sales of what men do not possess and "cornering" the market. Legitimate purchases of commodities and of stocks and securities for investment have no connection whatever with purchases of stocks or other securities or commodities on a margin for speculative and gambling purposes. There is no moral difference between gambling at cards or in lotteries or on the race track and gambling in the stock market. One method is just as pernicious to the body politic as the other in kind, and in degree the evil worked is far greater. But it is a far more difficult subject with which to deal. The great bulk of the business transacted on the exchanges is not only legitimate, but is necessary to the working of our modern industrial system, and extreme care would have to be taken not to interfere with this business in doing away with the "bucket shop" type of operation. We should study both the successes and the failures of foreign legislators who, notably in Germany, have worked along this line, so as not to do anything harmful. Moreover, there is a special difficulty in dealing with this matter by the Federal Government in a Federal Republic like ours. But if it is possible to devise a way to deal with it the effort should be made, even if only in a cautious and tentative way. It would seem that the Federal Government could at least act by forbidding the use of the mails, telegraph and telephone wires for mere gambling in stocks and futures, just as it does in lottery transactions.

I inclose herewith a statement issued by the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations (Appendix 1) in answer to certain statements (which I also inclose) made by and on behalf of the agents of the Standard Oil Corporation (Appendix 2) and a letter of the Attorney-General (Appendix 3) containing an answer to certain statements, also inclosed, made by the president of the Santa Fe Railway Company (Appendix 4). The Standard Oil Corporation and the railway company have both been found guilty by the courts of criminal misconduct; both have been sentenced to pay heavy fines; and each has issued and published broadcast these statements, asserting their innocence and denouncing as improper the action of the courts and juries in convicting them of guilt. These statements are very elaborate, are very ingenious, and are untruthful in important particulars. The following letter and inclosure from Mr. Heney sufficiently illustrate the methods of the high officials of the Santa Fe and show the utter falsity of their plea of ignorance, the similar plea of the Standard Oil being equally without foundation:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
DISTRICT OF OREGON,
Portland, January 11, 1908.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I understand that Mr. Ripley, of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway system, has commented with some severity upon your attitude toward the payment of rebates by certain transcontinental railroads and that he has declared that he personally never knew anything about any rebates being granted by his road. * * * I inclose you herewith copy of a letter from Edward Chambers, general freight traffic manager of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway system, to Mr. G. A. Davidson, auditor of the same company, dated February 27, 1907. * * *

This letter does not deal with interstate shipments, but the constitution of the State of California makes the payment of rebates by railroads a felony, and Mr. Ripley has apparently not been above the commission of crime to secure business. You are at liberty to use this inclosure in any way that you think it can be of service to yourself or the public. * * *

Sincerely, yours,

FRANCIS J. HENEY.

[Inclosure.]

SAN FRANCISCO, February 27, 1907.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith a file of papers covering the movement of fuel oil shipped by the Associated Oil Company over our line from January 1, 1906, up to and including November 15, 1906.

We agree with the Associated Oil Company's negotiations with Mr. Ripley, Mr. Wells, and myself, that no consideration of their making us a special price on oil for company use, which is covered by a contract, and the further consideration that we would take a certain quantity, they would in turn ship from Bakersfield over our line to San Francisco Bay points a certain minimum number of barrels of fuel oil at rate of 25 cents per barrel from Bakersfield, exclusive of the switching charge.

These statements cover the movement, except that they have included Stockton, which is not correct, as it is not a bay point and could not be reached as conveniently by water. We have paid them on account of this movement $7,239, which should be deducted from the total of movement shown in the attached papers.

I wish you would arrange to make up a statement, check the same, and refund to the Associated Oil Company down to the basis of 25 cents per barrel from Bakersfield where they are the shippers, regardless of who is consignee, as all their fuel oil is sold delivered. The reason for making this deal in addition to what I have stated, is that the Associated Oil Company have their own boats and carry oil from fields controlled by themselves along the coast near San Luis Obispo to San Francisco at a much lower cost than the special rate we have made them and in competition with the Union Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company, it was necessary for them to sell at the San Francisco Bay points on the basis of the cost of water transportation from the coast fields. They figured they could only afford to pay us the 25 cents per barrel if by doing this they sold our company a certain amount of fuel, otherwise the business covered by the attached papers would have come in by boat from the coast fields.

I am writing this up completely so that there may be in the papers a history of the reasons why this arrangement was made. I wish you would go ahead and make the adjustment as soon as possible, as the Associated Oil Company are very anxious to have the matter closed up. The arrangement was canceled on November 15th at a conference between Mr. Ripley, Mr. Wells, Mr. Porter, and myself.

Yours, truly, EDWARD CHAMBERS.

SHIPMENTS-ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY,
Mr. G. A. DAVIDSON,
Auditor, Los Angeles.

The attacks by these great corporations on the Administration's actions have been given a wide circulation throughout the country, in the newspapers and otherwise, by those writers and speakers who, consciously or unconsciously, act as the representatives of predatory wealth—of the wealth accumulated on a giant scale by all forms of iniquity, ranging from the oppression of wageworkers to unfair and unwholesome methods of crushing out competition, and to defrauding the public by stock jobbing and the manipulation of securities. Certain wealthy men of this stamp, whose conduct should be abhorrent to every man of ordinarily decent conscience, and who commit the hideous wrong of teaching our young men that phenomenal business success must ordinarily be based on dishonesty, have during the last few months made it apparent that they have banded together to work for a reaction. Their endeavor is to overthrow and discredit all who honestly administer the law, to prevent any additional legislation which would check and restrain them, and to secure if possible a freedom from all restraint which will permit every unscrupulous wrongdoer to do what he wishes unchecked provided he has enough money. The only way to counteract the movement in which these men are engaged is to make clear to the public just what they have done in the past and just what they are seeking to accomplish in the present.

The Administration and those who support its views are not only not engaged in an assault on property, but are strenuous upholders of the rights of property. The wise attitude to take is admirably stated by Governor Fort, of New Jersey, in his recent inaugural address; the principles which he upholds as regards the State being of course identical with those which should obtain as regards the Nation.

"Just and fair regulation can only be objected to by those misconceiving the rights of the State. The State grants all corporate powers to its railways and other public-utility corporations, and may not only modify, but repeal all charters and charter privileges it confers. It may, therefore, impose conditions upon their operation at its pleasure. Of course in the doing of these things, it should act wisely and with conservatism, protecting all vested rights of property and the interests of the innocent holders of the securities of existing quasi-public corporations. Regulation, therefore, upon a wise basis, of the operation of these public utilities companies, including the fixing of rates and public charges, upon complaint and subject to court review, should be intrusted to a proper board, as well as the right to regulate the output of stock and the bonded issues of such corporations. If this were done, it would inure to the benefit of the people and the companies, for it would fix the value of such securities, and act as a guaranty against their depreciation. Under such a law, the holders of existing securities would find them protected, and new securities offered would have the confidence of the people, because of the guaranty of the State that they were only issued for extensions or betterments and upon some basis of the cost of such extensions or betterments. It is difficult to suggest any legislation that would give greater confidence to the public and investors than a wise public utilities bill; and the mere suggestion of its enactment should cause this class of security holders to feel that their holdings were strengthened, and that the State was about to aid the managers of its public utility corporations to conserve their corporate property for the public benefit and for the protection of invested capital. * * *

"The time has come for the strict supervision of these great corporations and the limitation of their stock and bond issues under some proper public official. It will make for conservatism, and strengthen the companies doing a legitimate business, and eliminate, let us hope, those which are merely speculative in character and organized simply to catch the unsuspecting or credulous investor. Corporations have come in our business world to remain for all time. Corporate methods are the most satisfactory for business purposes in many cases. Every business or enterprise honestly incorporated should be protected, and the public made to feel confidence in its corporate organization. Capital invested in corporations must be as free from wrongful attack as that invested by individuals, and the State should do everything to foster and protect invested corporate capital and encourage the public in giving to it support and confidence. Nothing will do so much to achieve this desirable result as proper supervision and reasonable control over stock and bond issues, so that overcapitalization will be prevented and the people may know when they buy a share of stock or a bond * * * that the name of the State upon it stands as a guaranty that there is value behind it and reasonable safety in its purchase. The act must make it clear that the intent of the supervision by the Commissioner is not for the purpose of striking at corporate organizations or invested corporate capital, but rather to recognize and protect existing conditions and insure greater safeguards for the future. * * *

"Capital does not go into a State where reprisals are taken or vested interests are injured; it comes only where wise, conservative, safe treatment is assured, and it should be our policy to encourage and secure corporate rights and the best interests of stock and bond holders committed to our legal care."

Under no circumstances would we countenance attacks upon law-abiding property, or do aught but condemn those who hold up rich men as being evil men because of their riches. On the contrary, our whole effort is to insist upon conduct, and neither wealth nor property nor any other class distinction, as being the proper standard by which to judge the actions of men. For the honest man of great wealth we have a hearty regard, just as we have a hearty regard for the honest politician and the honest newspaper. But part of the movement to uphold honesty must be a movement to frown on dishonesty. We attack only the corrupt men of wealth, who find in the purchased politician the most efficient instrument of corruption and in the purchased newspaper the most efficient defender of corruption. Our main quarrel is not with these agents and representatives of the interests. They derive their chief power from the great sinister offenders who stand behind them. They are but puppets who move as the strings are pulled. It is not the puppets, but the strong cunning men and the mighty forces working for evil behind and through the puppets, with whom we have to deal. We seek to control law-defying wealth; in the first place to prevent its doing dire evil to the Republic, and in the next place to avoid the vindictive and dreadful radicalism which, if left uncontrolled, it is certain in the end to arouse. Sweeping attacks upon all property, upon all men of means, without regard to whether they do well or ill, would sound the deathknell of the Republic; and such attacks become inevitable if decent citizens permit those rich men whose lives are corrupt and evil to domineer in swollen pride, unchecked and unhindered, over the destinies of this country. We act in no vindictive spirit, and we are no respecters of persons. If a labor union does wrong, we oppose it as firmly as we oppose a corporation which does wrong; and we stand equally stoutly for the rights of the man of wealth and for the rights of the wage-worker. We seek to protect the property of every man who acts honestly, of every corporation that represents wealth honestly accumulated and honestly used. We seek to stop wrongdoing, and we desire to punish the wrongdoers only so far as is necessary to achieve this end.

There are ample material rewards for those who serve with fidelity the mammon of unrighteousness; but they are dearly paid for by the people who permit their representatives, whether in public life, in the press, or in the colleges where their young men are taught, to preach and to practice that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. The amount of money the representatives of certain great moneyed interests are willing to spend can be gauged by their recent publication broadcast throughout the papers of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, of huge advertisements attacking with envenomed bitterness the Administration's policy of warring against successful dishonesty, and by their circulation of pamphlets and books prepared with the same object; while they likewise push the circulation of the writings and speeches of men who, whether because they are misled, or because, seeing the light, they yet are willing to sin against the light, serve these their masters of great wealth to the cost of the plain people. The books and pamphlets, the controlled newspapers, the speeches by public or private men to which I refer, are usually and especially in the interest of the Standard Oil Trust and of certain notorious railroad combinations, but they also defend other individuals and corporations of great wealth that have been guilty of wrongdoing. It is only rarely that the men responsible for the wrongdoing themselves speak or write. Normally they hire others to do their bidding, or find others who will do it without hire. From the railroad-rate law to the pure-food law, every measure for honesty in business that has been passed during the last six years has been opposed by these men on its passage and in its administration with every resource that bitter and unscrupulous craft could suggest and the command of almost unlimited money secure. But for the last year the attack has been made with most bitterness upon the actual administration of the law, especially through the Department of Justice, but also through the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Bureau of Corporations. The extraordinary violence of the assaults upon our policy contained in these speeches, editorials, articles, advertisements, and pamphlets, and the enormous sums of money spent in these various ways, give a fairly accurate measure of the anger and terror which our public actions have caused the corrupt men of vast wealth to feel in the very marrow of their being. The attack is sometimes made openly against us for enforcing the law, and sometimes with a certain cunning, for not trying to enforce it in some other way than that which experience shows to be practical. One of the favorite methods of the latter class of assailant is to attack the Administration for not procuring the imprisonment instead of the fine of offenders under these antitrust laws. The man making this assault is usually either a prominent lawyer or an editor who takes his policy from the financiers and his arguments from their attorneys. If the former, he has defended and advised many wealthy malefactors, and he knows well that thanks to the advice of lawyers like himself, a certain kind of modern corporation has been turned into an admirable instrument by which to render it well-nigh impossible to get at the head of the corporation, at the man who is really most guilty. When we are able to put the real wrongdoer in prison, this is what we strive to do; this is what we have actually done with some very wealthy criminals, who, moreover, represented that most baneful of all alliances, the alliance between the corruption of organized politics and the corruption of high finance. This is what we have done in the Gaynor and Greene case, in the case of the misapplication of funds in connection with certain great banks in Chicago, in the land-fraud cases, where, as in other cases likewise, neither the highest political position nor the possession of great wealth has availed to save the offenders from prison. The Federal Government does scourge sin; it does bid sinners fear; for it has put behind the bars with impartial severity the powerful financier, the powerful politician, the rich land thief, the rich contractor—all, no matter how high their station, against whom criminal misdeeds can be proved. All their wealth and power can not protect them. But it often happens that the effort to imprison a given defendant is certain to be futile, while it is possible to fine him or to fine the corporation of which he is head; so that, in other words, the only way of punishing wrong is by fining the corporation, unless we are content to proceed personally against the minor agents. The corporation lawyers to whom I refer and their employers are the men mainly responsible for this state of things, and their responsibility is shared with all who ingeniously oppose the passing of just and effective laws, or who fail to execute them when they have been put on the statute books.

Much is said, in these attacks upon the policy of the present Administration, about the rights of "innocent stockholders." That stockholder is not innocent who voluntarily purchases stock in a corporation whose methods and management he knows to be corrupt; and stockholders are bound to try to secure honest management, or else are estopped from complaining about the proceedings the Government finds necessary in order to compel the corporation to obey the law. There has been in the past grave wrong done innocent stockholders by overcapitalization, stock watering, stock jobbing, stock manipulation. This we have sought to prevent, first, by exposing the thing done and punishing the offender when any existing law had been violated; second, by recommending the passage of laws which would make unlawful similar practices for the future. The public men, lawyers, and editors who loudly proclaim their sympathy for the "innocent stockholders" when a great law-defying corporation is punished, are the first to protest with frantic vehemence against all efforts by law to put a stop to the practices which are the real and ultimate sources of the damage alike to the stockholders and the public. The apologists of successful dishonesty always declaim against any effort to punish or prevent it, on the ground that any such effort will "unsettle business." It is they who by their acts have unsettled business; and the very men raising this cry spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in securing, by speech, editorial, book, or pamphlet, the defense by misstatements of what they have done; and yet when public servants correct their misstatements by telling the truth they declaim against them for breaking silence, lest "values be depreciated." They have hurt honest business men, honest workingmen, honest farmers, and now they clamor against the truth being told.

The keynote of all these attacks upon the effort to secure honesty in business and in politics is well expressed in brazen protests against any effort for the moral regeneration of the business world, on the ground that it is unnatural, unwarranted, and injurious, and that business panic is the necessary penalty for such effort to secure business honesty. The morality of such a plea is precisely as great as if made on behalf of the men caught in a gambling establishment when that gambling establishment is raided by the police. If such words mean anything they mean that those whose sentiments they represent stand against the effort to bring about a moral regeneration of business which will prevent a repetition of the insurance, banking, and street railroad scandals in New York; a repetition of the Chicago and Alton deal; a repetition of the combination between certain professional politicians, certain professional labor leaders, and certain big financiers, from the disgrace of which San Francisco has just been rescued; a repetition of the successful effort by the Standard Oil people to crush out every competitor, to overawe the common carriers, and to establish a monopoly which treats the public with a contempt which the public deserves so long as it permits men of such principles and such sentiments to avow and act on them with impunity. The outcry against stopping dishonest practices among wrongdoers who happen to be wealthy is precisely similar to the outcry raised against every effort for cleanliness and decency in city government, because, forsooth, it will "hurt business." The same outcry is made against the Department of Justice for prosecuting the heads of colossal corporations that has been made against the men who in San Francisco have prosecuted with impartial severity the wrongdoers among business men, public officials, and labor leaders alike. The principle is the same in the two cases. Just as the blackmailer and bribe giver stand on the same evil eminence of infamy, so the man who makes an enormous fortune by corrupting legislatures and municipalities and fleecing his stockholders and the public, stands on the same moral level with the creature who fattens on the blood money of the gambling house and the saloon. Moreover, in the last analysis, both kinds of corruption are far more intimately connected than would at first sight appear; the wrongdoing is at bottom the same. Corrupt business and corrupt politics act and react with ever increasing debasement, one on the other; the corrupt head of a corporation and the corrupt labor leader are both in the same degree the enemies of honest corporations and honest labor unions; the rebate taker, the franchise trafficker, the manipulator of securities, the purveyor and protector of vice, the blackmailing ward boss, the ballot-box stuffer, the demagogue, the mob leader, the hired bully, and man killer—all alike work at the same web of corruption, and all alike should be abhorred by honest men.

The "business" which is hurt by the movement for honesty is the kind of business which, in the long run, it pays the country to have hurt. It is the kind of business which has tended to make the very name "high finance" a term of scandal to which all honest American men of business should join in putting an end. The special pleaders for business dishonesty, in denouncing the present Administration for enforcing the law against the huge and corrupt corporations which have defied the law, also denounce it for endeavoring to secure sadly needed labor legislation, such as a far-reaching law making employers liable for injuries to their employees. It is meet and fit that the apologists for corrupt wealth should oppose every effort to relieve weak and helpless people from crushing misfortune brought upon them by injury in the business from which they gain a bare livelihood. The burden should be distributed. It is hypocritical baseness to speak of a girl who works in a factory where the dangerous machinery is unprotected as having the "right" freely to contract to expose herself to dangers to life and limb. She has no alternative but to suffer want or else to expose herself to such dangers, and when she loses a hand or is otherwise maimed or disfigured for life, it is a moral wrong that the whole burden of the risk necessarily incident to the business should be placed with crushing weight upon her weak shoulders, and all who profit by her work escape scot-free. This is what opponents of a just employers' liability law advocate; and it is consistent that they should usually also advocate immunity for those most dangerous members of the criminal class—the criminals of great wealth.

Our opponents have recently been bitterly criticising the two judges referred to in the accompanying communications from the Standard Oil Company and the Santa Fe Railroad for having imposed heavy fines on these two corporations; and yet these same critics of these two judges exhaust themselves in denouncing the most respectful and cautious discussion of the official action of a judge which results in immunity to wealthy and powerful wrongdoers or which renders nugatory a temperate effort to better the conditions of life and work among those of our fellow-countrymen whose need is greatest. Most certainly it behooves us all to treat with the utmost respect the high office of judge; and our judges, as a whole, are brave and upright men. Respect for the law must go hand in hand with respect for the judges; and, as a whole, it is true now as in the past that the judges stand in character and service above all other men among their fellow-servants of the public. There is all the greater need that the few who fail in this great office, who fall below this high standard of integrity, of wisdom, of sympathetic understanding and of courage, should have their eyes opened to the needs of their countrymen. A judge who on the bench either truckles to the mob and shrinks from sternly repressing violence and disorder, or bows down before a corporation; who fails to stand up valiantly for the rights of property on the one hand, or on the other by misuse of the process of injunction or by his attitude toward all measures for the betterment of the conditions of labor, makes the wageworker feel with bitterness that the courts are hostile to him; or who fails to realize that all public servants in their several stations must strive to stop the abuses of the criminal rich—such a man performs an even worse service to the body politic than the legislator or executive who goes wrong. The judge who does his full duty well stands higher, and renders a better service to the people, than any other public servant; he is entitled to greater respect; and if he is a true servant of the people, if he is upright, wise, and fearless, he will unhesitatingly disregard even the wishes of the people if they conflict with the eternal principles of right as against wrong. He must serve the people; but he must serve his own conscience first. All honor to such a judge; and all honor can not be rendered him if it is rendered equally to his brethren who fall immeasurably below the high ideals for which he stands. Untruthful criticism is wicked at all times, and whoever may be the object; but it is a peculiarly flagrant iniquity when a judge is the object. No man should lightly criticise a judge; no man should, even in his own mind, condemn a judge unless he is sure of the facts. If a judge is assailed for standing against popular folly, and above all for standing against mob violence, all honorable men should rally instantly to his support. Nevertheless if he clearly fails to do his duty by the public in dealing with lawbreaking corporations, lawbreaking men of wealth, he must expect to feel the weight of public opinion; and this is but right, for except in extreme cases this is the only way in which he can be reached at all. No servant of the people has a right to expect to be free from just and honest criticism.

The opponents of the measures we champion single out now one and now another measure for especial attack, and speak as if the movement in which we are engaged was purely economic. It has a large economic side, but it is fundamentally an ethical movement. It is not a movement to be completed in one year, or two or three years; it is a movement which must be persevered in until the spirit which lies behind it sinks deep into the heart and the conscience of the whole people. It is always important to choose the right means to achieve our purpose, but it is even more important to keep this purpose clearly before us; and this purpose is to secure national honesty in business and in politics. We do not subscribe to the cynical belief that dishonesty and unfair dealing are essential to business success, and are to be condoned when the success is moderate and applauded when the success is great. The methods by which the Standard Oil people and those engaged in the other combinations of which I have spoken above have achieved great fortunes can only be justified by the advocacy of a system of morality which would also justify every form of criminality on the part of a labor union, and every form of violence, corruption, and fraud, from murder to bribery and ballot-box stuffing in politics. We are trying to secure equality of opportunity for all; and the struggle for honesty is the same whether it is made on behalf of one set of men or of another. In the interest of the small settlers and landowners, and against the embittered opposition of wealthy owners of huge wandering flocks of sheep, or of corporations desiring to rob the people of coal and timber, we strive to put an end to the theft of public land in the West. When we do this, and protest against the action of all men, whether in public life or in private life, who either take part in or refuse to try to stop such theft, we are really engaged in the same policy as when we endeavor to put a stop to rebates or to prevent the upgrowth of uncontrolled monopolies. Our effort is simply to enforce the principles of common honesty and common sense. It would indeed be ill for the country should there be any halt in our work.

The laws must in the future be administered as they are now being administered, so that the Department of Justice may continue to be, what it now is, in very fact the Department of Justice, where so far as our ability permits justice is meted out with an even hand to great and small, rich and poor, weak and strong. Moreover, there should be no delay in supplementing the laws now on the statute books by the enactment of further legislation as outlined in the message I sent to the Congress on its assembling. Under the existing laws much, very much, has been actually accomplished during the past six years, and it has been shown by actual experience that they can be enforced against the wealthiest corporation and the richest and most powerful manager or manipulator of that corporation, as rigorously and fearlessly as against the humblest offender. Above all, they have been enforced against the very wrongdoers and agents of wrongdoers who have for so many years gone scot-free and flouted the laws with impunity, against great law-defying corporations of immense wealth, which, until within the last half dozen years, have treated themselves and have expected others to treat them as being beyond and above all possible check from law.

It is especially necessary to secure to the representatives of the National Government full power to deal with the great corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and above all, with the great interstate common carriers. Our people should clearly recognize that while there are difficulties in any course of conduct to be followed in dealing with these great corporations, these difficulties must be faced, and one of three courses followed:

The first course is to abandon all effort to oversee and control their actions in the interest of the general public and to permit a return to the utter lack of control which would obtain if they were left to the common law. I do not for one moment believe that our people would tolerate this position. The extraordinary growth of modern industrialism has rendered the common law, which grew up under and was adapted to deal with totally different conditions, in many respects inadequate to deal with the new conditions. These new conditions make it necessary to shackle cunning as in the past we have shackled force. The vast individual and corporate fortunes, the vast combinations of capital, which have marked the development of our industrial system, create new conditions, and necessitate a change from the old attitude of the State and the Nation toward the rules regulating the acquisition and untrammeled business use of property, in order both that property may be adequately protected, and that at the same time those who hold it may be prevented from wrongdoing.

The second and third courses are to have the regulation undertaken either by the Nation or by the States. Of course in any event both the National Government and the several State governments must do each its part, and each can do a certain amount that the other can not do, while the only really satisfactory results must be obtained by the representatives of the National and State governments working heartily together within their respective spheres. But in my judgment thoroughgoing and satisfactory control can in the end only be obtained by the action of the National Government, for almost all the corporations of enormous wealth—this is, the corporations which it is especially desirable to control—are engaged in interstate commerce, and derive their power and their importance not from that portion of their business which is intrastate, but from the interstate business. It is not easy always to decide just where the line of demarcation between the two kinds of business falls. This line must ultimately be drawn by the Federal courts. Much of the effort to secure adequate control of the great corporations by State action has been wise and effective, but much of it has been neither; for when the effort is made to accomplish by the action of the State what can only be accomplished by the action of the Nation, the result can only be disappointment, and in the end the law will probably be declared unconstitutional. So likewise in the national arena, we who believe in the measures herein advocated are hampered and not aided by the extremists who advocate action so violent that it would either be useless or else would cause more mischief than it would remedy.

In a recent letter from a learned judge of the supreme court of one of the Gulf States, the writer speaks as follows:

"In all matters pertaining to interstate commerce the authority of the National Government already exists and does not have to be acquired, and the exercise of this existing authority can be in no sense a usurpation of, or infringement upon, the rights of the States. On the contrary, had the Federal Government given this question more attention in the past and applied a vigorous check to corporate abuses, conditions would now be better, because the States would have had fewer real or imaginary grievances and have had less cause not only to attempt the exercise of the authority reserved to the National Government, but to act without proper moderation in matters peculiarly within their own provinces. The National Government has been remiss in the past, but even at this late day it can solve this problem, and the sooner the National authority is exercised the less apt are the States to take action which will represent encroachment upon the National domain. There is a field of operations for both powers, and plenty alike for National and State governments to do in order to protect both the people and the public utilities. The line of demarcation between Federal and State authority can and should be speedily settled by the Federal courts. The fact that the National Government has omitted to exercise the authority conferred upon it by the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution has made the States restive under what they deem corporate abuses, and in some cases has probably stimulated them to go too far in the attempt to correct these abuses, with the result that all measures which they passed, good or bad, have been held up by the Federal courts. The necessary equitable and uniform regulation can not be obtained by the separate action of the States but only by the affirmative action of the National Government."

This is an appeal by a high State judge, alarmed, as good citizens should be alarmed, by conflicts over the matter of jurisdiction, and by the radical action advocated by honest people smarting from a sense of injury received from corporations; which injury the Federal courts forbid the States to try to remedy, while the Federal Government nevertheless refrains from itself taking adequate measures to provide a remedy. It can not too strongly be insisted that the defenders and apologists of the great corporations, who have sought in the past and still seek to prevent adequate action by the Federal Government to control these great corporations, are not only proving false to the people, but are laying up a day of wrath for the great corporations themselves. The Nation will not tolerate an utter lack of control over very wealthy men of enormous power in the industrial, and therefore in the social, lives of all our people, some of whom have shown themselves cynically and brutally indifferent to the interests of the people; and if the Congress does not act, with good-tempered and sensible but resolute thoroughness, in cutting out the evils and in providing an effective supervision, the result is certain to be action on the part of the separate States, sometimes wise, sometimes ill-judged and extreme, sometimes unjust and damaging to the railroads or other corporations, more often ineffective from every standpoint, because the Federal courts declare it unconstitutional.

We have just passed through two months of acute financial stress. At any such time it is a sad fact that entirely innocent people suffer from no fault of their own; and everyone must feel the keenest sympathy for the large body of honest business men, of honest investors, of honest wageworkers, who suffer because involved in a crash for which they are in no way responsible. At such a time there is a natural tendency on the part of many men to feel gloomy and frightened at the outlook; but there is no justification for this feeling. There is no nation so absolutely sure of ultimate success as ours. Of course we shall succeed. Ours is a nation of masterful energy with a continent for its domain, and it feels within its veins the thrill which comes to those who know that they possess the future. We are not cast down by the fear of failure. We are upheld by the confident hope of ultimate triumph. The wrongs that exist are to be corrected; but they in no way justify doubt as to the final outcome, doubt as to the great material prosperity of the future, or of the lofty spiritual life which is to be built upon that prosperity as a foundation. No misdeeds done in the present must be permitted to shroud from our eyes the glorious future of the Nation; but because of this very fact it behooves us never to swerve from our resolute purpose to cut out wrongdoing and uphold what is right.

I do not for a moment believe that the actions of this Administration have brought on business distress; so far as this is due to local and not world-wide causes, and to the actions of any particular individuals, it is due to the speculative folly and flagrant dishonesty of a few men of great wealth, who seek to shield themselves from the effects of their own wrongdoing by ascribing its results to the actions of those who have sought to put a stop to the wrongdoing. But if it were true that to cut out rottenness from the body politic meant a momentary check to an unhealthy seeming prosperity, I should not for one moment hesitate to put the knife to the corruption. On behalf of all our people, on behalf no less of the honest man of means than of the honest man who earns each day's livelihood by that day's sweat of his brow, it is necessary to insist upon honesty in business and politics alike, in all walks of life, in big things and in little things; upon just and fair dealing as between man and man. Those who demand this are striving for the right in the spirit of Abraham Lincoln when he said:

"Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

In the work we of this generation are in, there is, thanks be to the Almighty, no danger of bloodshed and no use for the sword; but there is grave need of those stern qualities shown alike by the men of the North and the men of the South in the dark days when each valiantly battled for the light as it was given each to see the light. Their spirit should be our spirit, as we strive to bring nearer the day when greed and trickery and cunning shall be trampled under foot by those who fight for the righteousness that exalteth a nation.

APPENDIX 1.

Statement of the Commissioner of Corporations in answer to the Allegations of the Standard Oil Company concerning its Conviction at Chicago for Accepting Concessions on Shipments over the Chicago and Alton Railroad.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 9, 1907.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to a certain printed pamphlet, herewith inclosed, which has been sent to this Department, entitled "From the Directors of the Standard Oil Company to its Employees and Stockholders."

This pamphlet, particularly the statement of Mr. James A. Moffett therein, as you will observe, attempts to throw doubt on the merits of the recent conviction of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana at Chicago for accepting illegal railway concessions.

Inasmuch as the illegal rate involved in this case, as well as numerous other railway discriminations in favor of the Standard, were originally discovered by the Bureau of Corporations and exposed by its report to the President in May, 1906, and inasmuch, also, as the Bureau of Corporations took a large part in the preparation and trial of this case, indicating the sources of evidence and mainly securing the same, I desire from you a full statement upon the allegations of the said pamphlet.

Very respectfully,

OSCAR S. STRAUS, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF CORPORATIONS.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, October 11, 1907.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 9th instant, inclosing a copy of the pamphlet issued by the Standard Oil Company, I submit herewith a statement upon the allegations contained in said pamphlet.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT KNOX SMITH,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

STATEMENT IN ANSWER TO THE ALLEGATIONS OF THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY REGARDING ITS CONVICTION AT CHICAGO.

On August 3, 1907, at Chicago, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana was fined $29,240,000 for the violation of the Elkins antirebate law. This was the so-called "Alton case." Various statements have since appeared, one in particular signed by the president of that company, James A. Moffett, others in the public press, and also a series of confidential circular "trade letters," all endeavoring to throw doubt on the legality and equity of that conviction.

The report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the Transportation of Petroleum, published in May, 1906, on which this and all other pending rebate indictments of the Standard (except one) were based, appeared, one in particular signed by the president of that company, of the Standard in violating the antirebate laws. But these recent statements have made it necessary to show once more that the transactions which form the basis of this conviction at Chicago were such as struck at the very life and spirit of the Elkins antirebate law and of the policy of Congress in forbidding unfairness as between shippers.

The question in this case was one of a published 18-cent rate to East St. Louis, as against a secret 6-cent rate. The oil shipments involved in this so-called "Alton" conviction started from Whiting, Ind., the great refinery of the Standard near Chicago, and were delivered at St. Louis, Mo., or at East St. Louis, Ill., just across the river from St. Louis, by the Chicago and Alton Railroad. They covered a period from September 1, 1903, to March 1, 1905.

The law requires that all interstate railway rates be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. During this entire time there was on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a joint "tariff" or rate sheet to which the Alton road was a party, showing that the rate on fifth-class freight from Whiting and Chicago to East St. Louis was 18 cents per hundred pounds. Fifth-class freight includes petroleum oil. This joint tariff was a large printed document distributed to many shippers of all sorts of freight.

During the time so stated, 1,462 cars of oil were carried from Whiting, Ind., to East St. Louis over the Alton road for the Standard Oil Company at the rate of 6 cents per hundred pounds, just one-third of the said published rate. This same secret 6-cent rate had been used by the Standard Oil Company, and by no one else, for many years prior to this period. It was not filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and was absolutely secret and unknown to independent oil refiners, or to shippers generally.

The said statement of James A. Moffett uses the following remarkable language:

"It must be borne in mind that there is no question of rebate or discrimination in this case."

Whether is was a "rebate" or not is a mere question of words. Apparently the position of Mr. Moffett is that if he had actually paid the Alton Railroad 18 cents per hundred pounds and received back 12 cents, so as to make a net rate of 6 cents, this would have been a "rebate;" but, that because the lawful rate was 18 cents and his company only paid 6, and the balance (12 cents) never physically passed back and forth between his company and the Alton Railroad, although the result was exactly the same, it was not a "rebate." This statement is simply an evasion.

The other proposition of Mr. Moffett is that there was "no discrimination in this case." Apparently his position is that because no one else is known to have paid the published 18-cent rate from Whiting to East St. Louis while his company was paying 6 cents therefore there was no discrimination. On the contrary, this very situation proves that not only was there discrimination, but that this discrimination had worked out its logical result, so that no one else could ship at 18 cents in competition with the Standard's 6-cent rate. Precisely this, and other secret discriminations in shipments from Whiting, produced that complete state of monopoly in the vicinity of Chicago which the Standard now calmly designates as "absence of discrimination."

This 6-cent Alton rate was a "rebate" in essence, if not in form, and both in essence and in form it was a discrimination of the most severe and successful type.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana has tried to excuse its use of the 6-cent rate on two grounds. It admits that the 6-cent rate over the Alton Railroad was never filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, as the law required. But the Standard tries to remedy this fatal defect by referring to a certain "application sheet," which was on file with the Commission. This sheet merely stated that the rates from Chicago should apply also from Whiting, enumerated the tariffs referred to by it, and named specifically the tariff containing the 18-cent oil rate; but it made no mention of the unfiled "special billing order" containing the 6-cent rate, nor did it give any information as to any 6-cent rate on oil. Of course, this sort of thing was absolutely no notice to anyone of the unpublished 6-cent rate, nor was it intended to be.

But the chief ground upon which the Standard defends itself is the so-called "Chicago and Eastern Illinois rate." The claim is that while the shipments of oil were going on at 6 cents over the Alton Railroad there existed at the same time over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad a rate of 6¼ cents from Whiting to East St. Louis. The Standard claims that this 6¼-cent rate was a legal rate, and that therefore, inasmuch as the Standard could have shipped all its oil at this alleged legal rate over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, it was justified in accepting a like rate over the Alton, and thus that even if these shipments over the Alton were technically illegal there was no moral wrong about them.

So far from this "Chicago and Eastern Illinois rate" being a justification for the Alton shipments, it was an additional wrong in itself. The Chicago and Eastern Illinois rate was quite as secret as the Alton rate and was merely one more instance of the ingenious and deliberate attempts of the Standard to evade, or violate with impunity, the whole spirit of the antidiscrimination law.

The facts as to this "justifying" rate are as follows: In October, 1895, the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a single mimeograph sheet stating that the rate on oil from Dolton, Ill., to East St. Louis was 6¼ cents per hundred pounds. There is no evidence that this sheet was ever distributed to any shipper except the Standard Oil Company.

This rate read "from Dolton," not from Whiting or Chicago. A note, however, indicated that it might also be used from Whiting. But no independent shipper who wanted to ship oil from Chicago or Whiting to East St. Louis or St. Louis would ever think of looking for a rate from Dolton. Dolton is a village of about 1,500 population just outside of Chicago. Its only claim to note is that it has been for many years the point of origin for this and similar secret rates. Concealment is the only motive for such a circuitous arrangement. Such was the obscure origin and character of this "justifying" rate.

Furthermore, about four years later, in May, 1899, the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad still further concealed the existence of this already obscure Dolton rate by issuing and filing the same conspicuous 18-cent tariff, already mentioned, to which the Alton was also a party. This 18-cent tariff was the only oil rate on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois which could ever come to the notice of the ordinary shipper. Thus during this period the only justification for the Standard's claim that there was a legal 6¼-cent rate over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, lies in this inconspicuous mimeograph sheet of 1895 which read from Dolton, which was concealed further by a conspicuous 18-cent rate, and which was never distributed or made public. And, as a matter of fact, no other shipper knew of any 6 or 6¼ cent rate. Although such knowledge would have been very important in mitigation of the fine, the Standard made no attempt to prove such knowledge in the trial of the Chicago case.

Mr. Moffett, however, in his said statement was unfortunate enough to make the claim that "thousands of tons of freight have been shipped from these points during the last fifteen years under the same circumstances as the Standard shipments."

The grand jury, on instructions from Judge Landis, thereupon summoned Mr. Moffett before it, and reported to Judge Landis on October 4, in part, as follows:

"He [Mr. Moffett] was also unable to give to the grand jury information as to the shipment of a single pound of freight except by the Standard Oil Company from the points in question at a rate less than the lawfully published and filed rate."

This remarkable admission by Mr. Moffett shows the general value of his defense. He further admitted that his "statement" was largely prepared by his attorney, Mr. Moritz Rosenthal.

These facts of themselves refute completely the attempted justification of the Alton rate by means of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois 6¼-cent rate, and show that one was as secret as the other.

But still more significant was the conduct of the railroads and the Standard in the manner of handling the 6-cent rate over both railroads. The Standard claims that there was nothing secret about the rate. But every waybill for oil shipped over the Alton under this rate was "falsely billed"—that is, the waybills showed on their face a rate of 18 cents, with the freight charge in each case computed on the waybill at that rate, although the actual freight charge collected from the Standard was at the rate of 6 cents. In the contemporaneous shipments of the Standard over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois road every waybill for such shipments was disguised by another scheme, to wit, by being "blind billed"—that is, no rate at all was entered on the waybill until the said waybill reached the general offices of the railroad. The first scheme of "false billing" required the falsification of accounts to make them balance. The second scheme of "blind billing" entirely concealed the rate. Both schemes had the intended result of keeping the local freight agent and others outside the general office in ignorance of what the actual rate was, and thereby lessening the chance for outsiders to learn of this discrimination in favor of the Standard. Such falsifying and blind billing is the clearest proof that there was something illegal. Is any other explanation possible? In the vast multitude of waybills examined by the agents of the Bureau of Corporations in the offices of the railroads centering at Chicago no such use of "false billing" or "blind billing" was found in regard to any oil shipments except in connection with the 6-cent rate from Chicago to East St. Louis and with two other illegal rates on oil made by this same Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad.

Furthermore, the usual method of collecting freight charges is through the local freight agents. All the collections for oil shipped from Whiting to East St. Louis, both over the Alton and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, were made directly through the general offices. This also was, of course, to prevent any general knowledge of the rate.

Why were these unique and elaborate measures of concealment taken if the rates were lawful?

The grand jury, in the report above mentioned, refer to this point also, as follows:

"The representatives of the Chicago and Alton Railway Company stated to the grand jury that the case of the Standard Oil Company was the only one where the tariff naming the rate collected had not been regularly sent to the local freight agent, and that so far as they knew, this was the only case in which shipments had been made at a rate less than that named in the lawful tariff."

The officers of both these railroads admitted that this 6-cent rate was secret. One phrased it as "semiprivate."

The Standard has made also the ingenuous claim that its carefully organized freight-traffic department, certainly one of the best in the country, supposed this rate was legal, and that it had no knowledge that the Alton kept the rate secret. The Standard knew that the method of collecting the freight charges, both by the Alton and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, was altogether exceptional; that it was employed only in connection with this East St. Louis rate and with two other similar rates over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois. On the very face of several of the semimonthly bills rendered by the Alton to the Standard at the illegal 6-cent rate there appeared written evidence that the oil was being waybilled at 18 cents, so that the Standard had notice thereby of the "false billing," even if it had not been perfectly cognizant of it otherwise. Moreover, the only possible motive for that secrecy which the railroads admit that they maintained regarding this rate was to conceal it from competitors of the Standard, and it is inconceivable that the Standard should not have known of the practices which inured solely to its advantage.

Bearing also on such professed ignorance, a series of interesting memoranda were found by the agents of the Bureau of Corporations in the files of this very Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad, which memoranda have been quoted in full on pages 270 to 273 of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the Transportation of Petroleum, in May, 1906. These prove that the Standard knew every detail of the issuance of another contemporaneous illegal rate from Whiting via Grand Junction over this road; that the traffic manager of the Standard initiated it, dictated it to the railroads, and arranged for its secrecy by frequent consultations with the highest officers of the road.

Taking a still broader view of the situation at the time these Whiting-St. Louis rates were discovered, it is absolutely impossible to impute to the freight-traffic department of the Standard either ignorance or innocence as to any essential facts in relation to the railway rates on oil. There was set forth in the said report on Transportation of Petroleum rates especially favoring the Standard, either absolutely secret and illegal, or if technically legal still preferential and unfair, covering a large part of the United States. There were the secret and illegal rates to a large part of the South via Grand Junction, Tenn.; similar secret illegal rates from Whiting to Evansville, Ind., on which large shipments to the South were made; a secret rate combination from St. Louis into Louisiana—upon all of which rates indictments are now pending against the Standard; secret rates from the Standard's refinery at Olean, N. Y., into Vermont, upon which the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad has already been convicted and the Standard indicted, and various secret rates elsewhere.

These rates were all exposed by this Bureau in May, 1906. Within three months after that date every such rate criticised by the Bureau as illegal had been canceled by the railroads making the said rates. This voluntary action of the railroads themselves more than justified the conclusions of the Bureau that there had been in existence for a long time a system of railway discriminations in favor of the Standard Oil Company in almost every section of the country.

Considerations like these become highly material when the Standard Oil Company appeals, as it has, from a question of strict legality to a question of equity and good faith, and claims that in this specific case, though it may have been technically guilty, nevertheless it was morally innocent. As Judge Landis remarked, in imposing the fine, this was by no means "its virgin offense."

This Alton rate, therefore, was substantially a rebate; was the most effective kind of discrimination, because it killed out all competition; was secret and concealed by secret methods; is sought to be justified only by another like secret rate which also was covered by secret methods; was only one of a great system of discriminatory rates practically covering the country (which the railroads dared not maintain in the light of publicity), and in its ingenuity, secrecy, and complete effectiveness constitutes as extreme a violation of both the letter and spirit of the antirebate laws as could well be imagined.

Mr. Moffett also refers, by way of justification, to certain other rates on peas, beans, and popcorn, 8 cents; linseed oil, 8 cents, and others, as showing the reasonableness of the 6-cent oil rate. The "reasonableness" of this rate is not in question. The question is whether this rate constituted a discrimination as against other shippers of oil. Oil refiners in Chicago and elsewhere were not vitally concerned in the rates on popcorn.

The Standard undersold competitors in the great Southwest by means of this 6-cent rate to the St. Louis gateway, and, having undersold them and driven them out of that territory, it then raised prices to a monopoly figure, so that its marketing concern there was making over 690 per cent on its capital stock in 1904, and for a long series of years had been making profits extortionately high. These profits were thus based on this secret discrimination which had been in existence over fifteen years. The enjoyment of this discriminatory rate was well worth many millions of dollars to the Standard, and most emphatically justified the imposition of a great fine when that rate was finally discovered and conviction was secured thereon.

APPENDIX 2.

From the Directors of the Standard Oil Company to its Employees and Stockholders.

[August, 1907.]

A WORD IN ADVANCE.

The Directors of the Standard Oil Company, in printing this pamphlet, desire to emphasize for the half million of people directly interested in its welfare the assurance of the company's absolute innocence of wrongdoing in any of the prosecutions lately instituted against it in the Federal courts. Particularly is this so in the recent Chicago and Alton Railroad case, made notorious by the sensational fine of $29,240,000 imposed on the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

It should be known as widely as possible that this is no case of rebate or discrimination, but simply of the legality of a freight rate. It should be known that the verdict was obtained by the Government upon the most hair-splitting technicality, aided by the rigorous exclusion of evidence that would have removed all presumption of guilt.

If the judgment in question be allowed to stand the company will be forced to pay $20,000 (that is, fifty times the value of the oil) for every carload carried over the Alton road during two years at an open 6-cent rate—a rate used over three competing railroads for from ten to fourteen years! The trial judge refused to allow proof that the 6-cent rate had been filed by the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, and was, therefore, a "legal rate." He refused to allow proof that linseed oil, for instance, was carried at 8 cents, and other bulk commodities as low as 5 cents. He insisted that 18 cents was the only legal rate for oil when no one had ever paid it, and when it was authoritatively sworn that it did not apply to oil.

The case has been taken on appeal to the higher courts to which we must look for that calm judgment which will rescue the rights of the citizen from the field of public clamor and from the domain of vindictive politics.

So persistent and adroit has been the warfare waged with all the overpowering authority of the Federal Administration against the Standard Oil Company, that it has been manifestly difficult to get a fair hearing before the public or in a large portion of the press, the latter, to its great harm, swayed alike by socialistic outcry from below and political pressure from above.

As proof of the latter it may be noted that in the President's message of May 4, 1906, attack was made on the Standard Oil Company for the purpose of forcing the passage of the bill remitting the duty on denatured alcohol—a measure in which the company was not interested. On May 17, 1906, the issue of Commissioner Garfield's report on petroleum transportation, a tissue of old misrepresentations, was timed to influence the Hepburn rate bill then before Congress. On May 20, 1907, while Judge Landis had still under consideration the judgment in the Chicago and Alton case, Commissioner Smith's illogical and partisan report on Pipe Lines was made public. The Commissioner's second report on Petroleum Prices and Profits—a wholly false deduction from incomplete facts—was sent in advance to the press for publication on August 5 in the knowledge that Judge Landis would pronounce judgment on August 3. Here surely is evidence of a combination influencing all sources of public opinion, disturbing the orderly dispensation of justice, sanctioning in advance and supporting when made, the most sensational opinions and judgments hostile to the company.

What motive underlies the campaign of defamation need not here be discussed, but for all, friends and foes, it is reiterated that the Standard Oil Company is carrying on a widespread business of great moment to the prosperity of the American people in absolute obedience to the soundest principles of business and to the spirit and letter of the law. Attacks upon it of the kind described are aimed at the nation's industrial and mercantile life.

It is encouraging, amid the fury of the hour, which assails so many corporations, all organized industry and all wealth, to know that scores of editors through the country, on examination of the facts, have forcibly and clearly expressed their opinion that the greatest wrong has been done to the Standard Oil Company. Following their example, it is sincerely hoped that editors who have passed hasty judgment on the Company will also examine the facts and reach just conclusions. That our friends may know more fully how the truly independent are upholding right and honesty, a few editorial comments are appended, following Mr. Moffett's public statement on the Alton case. Each one of the articles and extracts will repay reading.

STATEMENT OF JAMES A. MOFFETT, PRESIDENT, STANDARD OIL COMPANY, OF INDIANA.

The court having pronounced its judgment in the case of the United States v. Standard Oil Company, of Indiana, there can now be no impropriety in stating our position to the American people.

The facts in this case are simple and easily understood. The Standard Oil Company, of Indiana, was convicted of receiving what the Government claimed was a concession from the Chicago and Alton in the shipment of oil from its refinery at Whiting, Ind., to East St. Louis, Ill. It must be borne in mind that there is no question of rebate or discrimination in this case. The contention of the Government was that the lawful rate was 18 cents per 100 pounds between these two points. The defendant claims: First, that the lawful rate was 6 cents; and, secondly, if 6 cents was not the lawful rate it was the rate issued to the Standard by the Alton as the lawful rate, and the Standard was justified in believing from its own investigation and from the information received from the railroad company that 6 cents was the lawful rate.

The 18-cent rate was a "class" and not a "commodity" rate, and the chairman of the Chicago and St. Louis Traffic Association, the association issuing the 18-cent class rate, under oath testified that it was never applied and was never intended to apply to oil.

The period of time covered by the indictment in this case was from September 1st, 1903, to March 1st, 1905. The rate on oil between Chicago and East St. Louis over the Alton for fourteen years, from 1891 to 1905, was always 6 cents per 100 pounds. This was an open published rate known to everyone concerned in the shipment of oil and generally known in all railroad circles in Chicago. Both Chicago and East St. Louis being in Illinois, the railroad company was under no legal obligation to file this rate with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, but Whiting, being in Indiana, shipments from Whiting to East St. Louis were technically, at least, interstate, and hence the Alton filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission what is known as an "application sheet" applying to Whiting the Chicago rate, and deemed the filing of the application sheet all that was necessary under the law.

For over thirty years, by custom, all of the little industrial towns grouped about Chicago, and which are in reality an essential part of Chicago and go to make up its industrial strength, have been given the same freight rates as Chicago. The reason for this is, of course, apparent, and it is because of this uniformity of freight rates that Chicago as the center of this group is to-day a city of over two million inhabitants. If Whiting, Pullman, Hegewisch and South Chicago did not get the same freight rates as Chicago, manufacturing establishments in these towns would be compelled to close their doors. Because of this condition and situation railroads created what is known as the Chicago Switching District, which includes Whiting and all of these other little manufacturing towns in and around Chicago. These towns are further unified by a belt line railroad which encircles Chicago and connects this entire industrial system with the trunk lines radiating from Chicago.

Thousands of tons of freight have been shipped from these points during the past fifteen years under the same circumstances as the Standard shipments, and if the Standard is guilty in this case, so is practically every other shipper in this great manufacturing territory. Is there a purpose in selecting the Standard as the victim?

The Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad also runs between Whiting and East St. Louis. The Standard Oil Company shipped about one-third of all the oil that went from Whiting to East St. Louis over the Eastern Illinois, the other two-thirds going over the Alton and the Burlington. On the trial of the case the defendant offered to show by witnesses who were on the stand that not only during the period of time covered by the indictment, but continuously from 1895, the Eastern Illinois had a lawful published and filed rate between Whiting and East St. Louis on oil of 6 cents per hundred pounds and that the Standard Oil Company shipped at such rate over the Eastern Illinois more than two thousand cars of oil each year during said period. To this offer the Government through its attorneys strenuously objected and the court sustained the objection. The defendant contended, and still does contend, that this proof would have conclusively shown that the Standard Oil Company had no possible motive in shipping over the Alton, and thereby violating the law, when it might just as readily and conveniently have shipped all of its oil over the Eastern Illinois and not have violated any law.

The defendant also offered to prove that packing-house products, during the same period of time, were carried between these same points under a "commodity" rate for 10 cents; malt, 7 cents; brick, 5 cents; corn meal, 7 cents; resin, 6½ cents; starch, 8 cents; pease, beans and popcorn, 8 cents; linseed oil in tank cars, 8 cents; glycerine, 6 cents. The court again sustained the objections of Government counsel and thus again prohibited us from showing the jury how absurd was the Government's claim that the rate, for example, on linseed oil was 8 cents, while on petroleum oil it was 18 cents.

Under such circumstances, and in view of the fact that petroleum had been openly carried over the three roads from Whiting to East St. Louis for from ten to fourteen years for 6 cents, what a draft it is on human credulity for the prosecution to assert that 18 cents was the only possible lawful rate!

The uncontradicted evidence also showed that the Standard Oil Company was advised by the rate clerk of the Chicago and Alton that this 6 cent rate was filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Knowing that the rate on the Eastern Illinois was but 6 cents; having no reason for shipping over the Alton in preference to the Eastern Illinois, and able to ship all of its oil over the latter road, we insist that the facts, many of which the court did not permit us to show, not alone demonstrate innocence but inherently forbid the idea of guilt.

We further insist that whatever may be one's technical view of the law relating to the above question, every equitable consideration is with the defendant, and if the only desire was to give this defendant a "square deal" this prosecution would never have been instituted.

The American public not only believes in fair play in the abstract, but, with all the facts before it, it has the capacity to determine whether a defendant, rich or poor, has received a "square deal."

For all these reasons the Standard Oil Company asserts that it is not even technically guilty and that it ought never to have been prosecuted because of the claimed failure of a railroad company—which has neither been indicted nor prosecuted—to file its tariff, and that the prosecution of this defendant under the circumstances of this case is a prostitution of the spirit and the high purpose of the Interstate Commerce Act.

THE HOUR OF SENSATION IN "LAW."

[From the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Daily Eagle, August 3, 1907.]

The fines which Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis to-day imposed on the officials of the Standard Oil Company, in Chicago, amount to over $29,000,000. It should be borne in mind that this sentence will be reviewed by the courts above Landis, up to and through the Supreme Court of the United States. There should be a reservation of confidence that this sentence will stand, until it shall have been passed upon by all the higher tribunals, and especially by the tribunal of last resort.

This suggestion is not made for any other purpose than the legitimate and almost invariably vindicated one of deprecating sensationalism, especially sensationalism in law, since that happens to be, as a rule, the very form of sensationalism upon which calming courts, especially the highest court, take almost an admitted pleasure in sitting down.

Very eminent jurists in the States of New England and in the Middle States have unofficially, but candidly, said that the peremptory summons of the Standard officials into the court, in Chicago, to answer as to their resources or as to their responsibility for offenses charged, was absolutely novel, questionably constitutional and will almost certainly be made on appeal of no effect.

To-day, however, is not the hour of reasoning. It is the hour of sensation, of excitement and of "applause." To-morrow, or soon after, will come the hour of reflection, of review and of "the sober second thought" of instituted and of impartial law. None need be "sorry" for the Standard Oil Company. Its lawyers assure that company it need not even be "sorry" for itself. But those who would discriminate the probable from the improbable, the likely from the unlikely, the usual from the unusual, should at least discount this sensational sentence, until it shall have been reviewed by tribunals of greater responsibility, of greater learning and of greater estate in public opinion.

The Standard may deserve all it has received. But it has been arraigned under the law, and by law it must stand or fall. One of the incidents, or rather one of the rights, to which it is entitled under the law is appeal from lower courts to higher, and from the higher courts to the highest. This process of appeal to law upon points of law and upon principles of law will proceed in due course, and will require quite probably at least two years for completion. We advise our readers calmly to await the orderly completion of the course provided and prescribed, in the full confidence that eventually reason will take the place of excitement, learning of impulse, equity of agitation, usage of novelty, and that at the last the country will be satisfied with the result reached, a result which neither "yellowism in journalism" nor "yellowism" on the part of the inferior judiciary will be in any wise able to alter or deflect.

UNSUSTAINED BY LAW OR JUSTICE.

[From the New York Times, August 5, 1907.]

The imposing of a fine of $29,240,000 upon the Standard Oil Company of Indiana by Judge Landis is a matter of profound psychologic interest. Undoubtedly it is of judicial and legal interest as well. But we think the first inquiry will be, What could have been going on in the mind of the court when it was making up to inflict this astounding penalty? It can not be assumed that Judge Landis wished to make the law ridiculous by applying it in all its unconscionable rigor. The judicial mind is not supposed to operate in that way. The theory that the ill-repute of the Standard Oil corporation as an octopus, its defiant attitude toward restraining laws, or its behavior as defendant in the court, stirred the judge to a pitch of vindictive passion that prompted the imposing of this huge fine is equally untenable.

We do not for a moment suppose that Judge Landis expects this fine to be collected and the money paid in to the United States Government; nor even that he expects his action in imposing it to be sustained by the courts above. The Elkins antirebate act is a just and proper statute, though it may be objected that the maximum penalty of $20,000 fine for each offense is excessive and unnecesary. The aim of statutes of this nature is to punish offenses committed in the past, and by deterrent penalties to prevent the commission of like offenses in the future. It is only in capital cases that the law seeks the annihilation of the offender. Under the statutes regulating corporations destruction is not aimed at, and, until Judge Landis spoke yesterday, has not been attempted. Mere forfeiture of a charter would be incomparably less serious, as that would leave tangible assets unimpaired, and reorganization under suitable assurances of good behavior would be possible. No corporation, however, can pay fines like this and continue to do business. The minimum fine of $1,000 for each offense, amounting to nearly a million and a half dollars, would certainly have been punitive. Most persons, we presume most judges, would have thought it adequate. But no theory of law or justice sustains such a thumping penalty as Judge Landis has pronounced.

We took occasion some time ago to observe that under the judge's ruling in this case the transportation of commodities in interstate commerce would be attended with the gravest risk to the shipper. The judge ruled that the Standard Oil defendant was bound to have knowledge that the rate furnished to it by the Chicago and Alton road was, in fact, the lawful published rate, and that this rate had been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It appeared in evidence that the Standard Oil Company was advised by the rate clerk of the Chicago and Alton that this 6-cent rate was filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The judge ruled, however, that the 18-cent rate was the lawful rate, and that the defendant was bound to know it. How a shipper can do business in safety after this unless in each transaction he personally informs himself by application to the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington that the rate furnished him is the lawful published and filed rate, it is impossible to see. A rate may be changed at any time on due notice to the Commission. How is the shipper to know that last week's rate still prevails unless in each transaction he makes inquiry at Washington? Since the penalty of ignorance, even of innocent ignorance, may be a fine of $20,000, he would feel compelled either to consult the Commission before shipping his goods, or else go out of business. In fact, such a construction of the law makes business impossible.

It would be interesting to know on what ground Judge Landis excluded testimony offered by the defendant to show that during the time covered by the indictment the Eastern Illinois Road "had a lawful published and filed rate between Whiting and East St. Louis on oil of 6 cents per 100 pounds, and that the Standard Oil Company shipped at such rate over the Eastern Illinois more than 2,000 carloads of oil each year during said period." This evidence has an important bearing upon the question of motive. The oil company could lawfully have shipped its oil at 6 cents over one road; why should it accept an unlawful rate from another road and thus run its neck into the noose that Judge Landis has tightened with so firm a hand?

The grave interest and importance of the principle involved, as well as the unexampled magnitude of the fine, insure the carrying of the case to the Supreme Court. The decision of that tribunal may be illuminating upon many points of law and policy that now much occupy the public mind and the minds of corporation managers.

A VINDICTIVE FINE.

[From the Pittsburg Gazette-Times, August 4, 1907.]

While in the case of the Standard Oil Company at Chicago it would have been ridiculous to ask or expect Judge Landis to temper justice with mercy, it is equally ridiculous that he should have gone about his duty vindictively. The fine of $29,240,000 is beyond all reason. A fine is intended to serve a three-fold purpose. It should be exemplary, and thus serve as a warning to the defendant and to all others engaged in similar offending. It should be of sufficient amount to operate as a punishment, as in that way only can the defendant be impressed with the seriousness of his offence. It should fit the crime. "There is not any means by which a given quantity of punishment can be rendered more exemplary than by choosing it of such a sort as shall bear an analogy to the offense." But a fine should not be confiscatory; it should not be made unduly heavy simply because the defendant has the money to pay it, and, above all, it should not be vindictively imposed, as by that course it is robbed of its moral effect upon the community at large and thus defeats the real ends of justice.

It may be granted that Judge Landis' action deals a staggering blow to corporation offenders and that, win or lose in the court of last resort, the Standard hereafter will be more scrupulous in its conduct and have a keener appreciation of the law and the courts. But that is not the only desideratum at this time. The public wanted an example made of the Standard, not a martyr.

Here is where the piling up of more than $29,000,000 in fines is likely to defeat one of the chief purposes of the law. Judge Landis would not have dealt so with an individual, no matter what his financial ability. He would not have dealt so with any other corporation. That he would have made the fine substantial, adjusting it with proper relation to the offense, is doubtless true; but that he would have multiplied it by the extreme limit of the counts in the indictment, upon each count imposing the maximum penalty, is unbelievable. Hence, instead of preserving the doctrine of the square deal, which he explicitly professes to be following, unless we are very much mistaken he has given it the worst blow on record.

THE MANUFACTURE OF PREJUDICE.

[From the Providence Journal, August 6, 1907.]

Some of the comment on the penalty imposed in the Standard Oil cases betrays a suggestion of reaction of public sentiment, in view of the punitive character of the sentence, to the full extent of the law. It is pointed out that like success in the prosecution of indictments still to come, followed by an equal measure of the law's vengeance, would result in putting the great monopoly out of business; while it is urged that Standard Oil is not wholly without claim on public respect as a great business institution that the American people on many accounts have reason to be proud of. Is it, then, too elastic a stretch of fancy to surmise that because the Government anticipated the working of some such mingled emotions in the public heart and conscience, the publication of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the petroleum industry, demonstrating the relations of Standard Oil to the consumer and how little reason the latter has for indulging in a belated sentimentalism in a matter of stiff business facts, was timed to a nicety with the sentence of the Federal court?

ALL THE ELEMENTS OF CRIME LACKING.

[From the New York Financial Chronicle, August 10, 1907.]

The whole sum and substance, therefore, of the Standard's offending was that it did not satisfy itself that the six-cent rate which it had paid for a long series of years to the different railroads on shipments of oil from its refinery at Whiting, Ind., to East St. Louis, Ill., had in the case of the Alton road been filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission in such a manner as to make it a legal and lawful rate. Failing compliance with this requirement, the higher "class" rate (covering a whole variety of articles and commodities) of 18 cents should have been paid by the shipper.

Candidly speaking, the Standard Company has been convicted of a crime, and yet all the elements of a crime seem to be lacking. What the Elkins law, the interstate commerce law, and all the other laws on the Federal statute books are directed against is secret rebates and concessions. The thing abhorrent to the statute is that one shipper should pay a high rate and another shipper should knowingly pay a lower rate, thus getting an advantage over his rival and competitor. In this case there was no evidence to show that any shipments had ever been made at the eighteen-cent rate, and the six-cent rate appears to have been available to all shippers alike. The only question at issue is whether, technically, the six-cent rate was a legal rate, since the Alton Company had not properly placed it on file at Washington. We are not anxious to pose as defenders of the Standard Oil Company, but from this review of the facts it must be evident that there is at least grave doubt whether the law was actually violated, and still graver doubt that the violation was intentional, thereby constituting a crime was intended. Yet Judge Landis treats the case as if it was one of the strongest ever presented in a court of law and penalizes the concern in the prodigious sum of $29,240,000.

STATE OWNERSHIP OF EVERYTHING.

[From the New York Herald, August 12, 1907.]

If Mr. Bonaparte, the Attorney-General, has not been misquoted he favors a policy big with menace for American industry and commerce. After making the announcement that his department would prosecute all lawbreakers—a somewhat unnecessary announcement, for it is his business and duty to prosecute them—he added that if the fine imposed on the Standard Oil Company were upheld the Government might "appoint a receiver to operate the convicted trust."

The logical application of such amazing views would place the State in control of all production and exchange—in other words, of the commerce and industry of the entire country. A charge brought against any company or corporation might result in the imposition of a crushing fine, and, finally, in the appointment of an official receiver "to operate the convicted" company or corporation. The Government, in fact, would be in a position to treat any erring industrial or commercial organization as a bankrupt or would be able to force bankruptcy upon it and take over its direction. Thus in a short space of time the American Government may find itself operating railways, directing the iron and steel "trusts," and making shoes, peddling petroleum and dealing in underclothing and hosiery.

The creation of a socialistic state may not be the conscious aim of the "muck rakers," but their efforts tend in that direction. Reflective people, however, must wonder whether the moment has not come to call a halt. Circumstances are combining to expose the danger in the systematic baiting of "capital," the railing against the "trusts," the vehement and ignorant denunciation of "monopolies" and the incessant efforts of politicians to obtain support by truckling to the passions of the envious and the idle.

Such a policy can only result in the dislocation of trade and the restriction of industry. If the objects of those who are carrying on the campaign were actually to ruin the small investor and frighten away foreign capital they could not succeed more admirably than they are doing. The slump in Wall street has been felt painfully in thousands of homes, and foreign investors, in the present circumstances, are not likely to come forward.

MERE FUTILE SENSATION.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Post, August 5, 1907.]

Much as we would like to see the lawless acts of so-called "predatory wealth" meet with effectual punishment, we are obliged to say, after reading the opinion of Judge Kenesaw Landis, fining the Standard Oil Company the gasping sum of $29,000,000, that it was a piece of judicial sensationalism that won't stand the test of the higher courts. * * * The opinion of Judge Landis was labored and as full of holes as an imported cheese. * * * In principle, it amounted to the same thing as finding, in a case of assault and battery by some notorious ruffian, that fifty-three blows had been struck, and holding that each blow constituted assault and battery, and multiplying the lawful punishment by the fifty-three blows. * * * Judge Landis, in his opinion, indicated plainly that, inasmuch as the Standard Oil Company was a trust, and it was "predatory" in its character, it should be given the limit, on general principles, when an opening was available through which to soak it. * * * It may be popular, and Judge Landis has attained transient fame as the jurist who levied the most gigantic fine in history, but it is not law. * * * It may be justice, but it is not law, and the incident is a mere futile sensation.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Daily Times, August 5, 1907.]

The pubication at this time of another chapter of the serial "report" which the Administration at Washington is issuing in relation to the business of the Standard Oil Company is not, it may be safely assumed, accidental in its coincidence with the action of Judge Landis at Chicago in assessing the company nearly thirty million of dollars in fines for its alleged infraction of the Elkins law against railroad rebates. The campaign against this very rich and prosperous corporation is being carefully managed, and the precision with which the blows are delivered is well calculated to make any politician shed tears who thinks that attacks on the trusts can be made a leading feature of the democratic Presidential campaign next year—Mr. W. J. Bryan, for instance.

The Washington report, an abstract of which is given elsewhere, like the long address delivered at Chicago by Judge Landis, on Saturday, bristles with evidence that the Standard Oil Company has "made money." It is ostensibly the work of Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, a young gentleman well known in Hartford. Actually, we suppose, it is the production of James R. Garfield, the Secretary of the Interior, who preceded Mr. Smith at the head of the Bureau of Corporations, and who made the onslaught on this corporation the principal feature of his work in that office. We notice that Mr. Garfield was heard from in California yesterday, where he made a strong indorsement of Judge Landis's action a feature of a public address.

This Chicago fine is worthy of a little attention. The facts in the case are these. For many years past the rate on freight carried in bulk from Chicago and its suburban railroad section to East St. Louis has been about 6 cents per hundred pounds. On packing-house products the rate has been 10 cents; brick, 5 cents; corn meal, 7 cents; malt, 7 cents, etc. The 6-cent rate for petroleum prevailed on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, Burlington, and Chicago and Alton lines. The Standard Oil Company has done most of its business over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois line, having sent over 2,000 carloads of oil each year from Whiting (its oil shipping point in the Chicago district) to St. Louis. If it had sent all of its oil by that route it would not now be owing Government this little item of $29,240,000. But some of the oil traffic was given to the Chicago and Alton road, and here two things are to be noted. The present owners and managers of the Chicago and Alton Company have been made the object of severe arraignment by the Interstate Commerce Commission, because of certain financial operations, and the town of Whiting is just over the Illinois line in Indiana, which makes the sending of freight from that point to East St. Louis interstate business. So the careful gentlemen at Washington who are engineering the suit against the Standard Oil Company brought action against it for sending oil to East St. Louis over the Chicago and Alton during the two years after the Elkins law went into effect, but carefully refrained from suing the company for sending its oil over the other roads between the same points at the same time. It appears that the Chicago and Eastern Illinois had a published 6-cent rate between the Chicago territory and East St. Louis, while the Chicago and Alton had failed to file a specific tariff sheet, although, as it is alleged, the Alton officers did file with the Interstate Commerce Commission what is known as an "application sheet" applying to Whiting the Chicago rate, and deemed the filing of the application sheet all that was necessary under the law.

In the trial of the suit Judge Landis forbade the presentation of any testimony showing that the 6-cent rate was the open and prevailing rate between the Chicago district and East St. Louis during the whole period from 1891 until 1905, and excluded every bit of evidence tending to show that any other rate than the 18-cent rate was a lawful rate during this time. He succeeded in constructing a technical case against the company which will go to the Supreme Court, where it is certain to be reviewed on its merits. If the Standard Oil Company has violated any law, it should be dealt with by the courts like any other transgressor, but we are unable to see that in this case there has been any violation of law.

The announcement this morning that Judge Landis is named as a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Illinois, and that there is a prospect that on the strength of his fining the Standard Oil Company this huge sum he can probably defeat Governor Deneen, comes as the natural and expected sequel of his proceeding in this case. The judge is a member of a family of politicians, most of whom are in public office. He has been in office most of the time since he became of age. He was private secretary to the late Mr. Gresham when that gentleman was Secretary of State in Mr. Cleveland's cabinet and left the Department at Mr. Cleveland's demand.

PLAYING TO THE GALLERIES.

[From the Daily Mining Gazette, Houghton, Mich., August 6, 1907.]

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis has been playing to the galleries from the time the cases against the Standard Oil Company were first brought to his court. When he assessed the corporation a fine aggregating almost thirty millions of dollars he did a most foolish thing ever in the interests of the dear people, because the very amount of the fine is enough to give the Supreme Court an opportunity to send the case back because the punishment can easily be construed as unusual and cruel by a court with any such inclination. Then again the Standard has another loophole. Courts in interpreting laws usually seek to figure out the intention of the legislative body which makes the laws. It may well be doubted if the Congress which passed the law against rebates ever intended to have a thirty million dollar fine imposed for the first conviction under the law. The law fixes $20,000 as the maximum fine, but by bunching the cases Judge Landis has arranged an aggregate fine which is staggering even in these days of immense wealth. And then again there is a reasonable doubt as to the technical guilt of the big oil corporation even under the action upon which Judge Landis has found it guilty. The company got a 6-cent rate on its oil and the same rate was open for other companies as far as the Standard is concerned. The tariff was posted everywhere, except with the Interstate Commerce Commission. But the Standard people assert, and with some vehemence and justice, it seems to us, that they should not be held for the negligence of the railroad company. In other words, if the shipper, in this case the Standard, is to be held responsible for the proper tariff publications of the railroad corporation with which it does business, the ordinary shipper will have little else to do in this world of business but look after the duties of the railroads.

IMPOSSIBLE TO SHIPPERS.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Herald, August 5, 1907.]

The colossal fine imposed, the extreme limit provided by the law, would only be in accordance with judicial precedent if the defendant company were now being convicted after previous repeated trial and conviction. The practice of criminal courts, the world over, is to make the first sentence less than the full rigor of the law. This rule is useful to the ends of practical justice, leaving, as it does, something additional to be imposed upon criminals who persist in their offenses after having once been brought to punishment. In the present case there seems to be no excuse for having departed from this precedent, except that the penalty was presumed to be popular with the public.

In his rulings during the examination of the defendant company, Judge Landis laid down certain novel rules for the application of the law to all persons doing business with common carriers. One which impresses us as being likely to lead to a reversal of the whole proceeding, is that which prevented the Standard Oil Company from showing that it paid a reduced freight rate in good faith, supposing that it was the full legal rate. Under such a ruling, if it be sound law, it becomes the duty of every shipper, not merely to learn the published rate of the carrier, but to know that the rate thus published is the legal rate. How such knowledge can possibly be had by shippers, with absolute certainty, we fail to see. It would appear possible that a shipper, innocent of all intent to break the law, might ship his goods at a rate illegally contrived by a railroad company. Under Judge Landis's remarkable ruling, such a shipper would become liable to the maximum penalty for an act which he supposed was in full obedience to the law.

We fear that the conviction of the Standard by such processes may prove, upon examination by the Supreme Court of the United States, to be no conviction at all.

AN IMPOSITION ON ITS FACE.

[From the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News, August 5, 1907.]

The fine imposed on the Standard Oil Company by the Chicago court is excessive, and an imposition on its face.

This thing of fining any corporation $29,000,000 and the intimating that it will be fined $85,000,000 more in other cases is going beyond the bounds of reason and common sense.

Sometimes a man is indicted by a grand jury for violating a criminal law a thousand times. If he is convicted on the first indictment he is given what the court considers reasonable punishment for what he has been doing and there the case ends. He is not, in a word, sentenced to the penitentiary for a thousand years, or for a hundred, as for that unless the crime is murder. The Standard Oil Company seems to have violated the same law several thousand times. The ends of justice would be met by imposing a reasonable fine and then serving notice on the company that if the offense was repeated the maximum penalty would be imposed in each case.

The whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is that this country is going wild in its crusade against corporations. Combinations of capital should be regulated by law so that they will not oppress the people, but confiscation of money or property is not recognized by our Constitution or our ideas of government. The order of the Chicago court is clearly an act of confiscation. The ends of justice do not demand that thirty million dollars of the money of the Standard Oil Company be paid into court for the violation of an antirebate law. Public policy does not call for such a fine. We are of the opinion that the good sense and spirit of fairness of the American people will revolt against the decision of the Chicago court.

CLAPTRAP AND FARCE.

[From the Bellman (Minneapolis, Minn.), August 10, 1907.]

Of course this journal should, as in duty bound, add its note of satisfaction to the hysterical roar of applause with which the practically unanimous press of the country has hailed the act of Judge Landis in fining the Standard Oil Company the enormous sum of $29,240,000—and he might have added, in order to give due significance to the verdict, 30 cents; for the last-named trifle would seem to come nearer to the probable net return of his fine after the case has been calmly passed upon by a higher court.

The offense of which the company was so glibly and easily convicted, and so monstrously fined, was neither restraint of trade, discrimination, attempt to create a monopoly, nor conspiracy to rob the consumer. Damage was done to nobody whatever; neither public nor private interests were harmed in the slightest by the transactions specified in the indictment.

The offense of the company was in not insisting upon paying a ridiculous and obsolete rate of freight, three times the charge made by other railroads. The omission of the Chicago and Alton Railway to amend its published rate to agree with the rate given and the neglect of the shipper to see that this omission was rectified constituted the sum and substance of the technicality upon which the Standard Oil Company was convicted.

For this high crime and misdemeanor, which harmed no one and was at the most but a technical violation of law, the company was found guilty on more than fourteen hundred counts. Judge Landis fined it the maximum penalty on each count, and the grand total of this amazing judgment was $29,240,000.

If this be justice, if it be ordinary common sense, the Bellman is unable to see it. Such proceedings savor of claptrap and farce and must suggest to the impartial observer the slap-stick stage trial, arranged more for the purpose of satisfying the melodramatic tastes of the audience than to serve the impartial ends of justice.

THE GREATEST OUTRAGE.

[From the Atchison (Kans.) Daily Globe, August 5, 1907.]

Most people believe the fine of twenty-nine million dollars imposed against the Standard Oil Company, last Saturday, by Judge Landis, of the United States court at Chicago, was for rebating. Most people also believe that the order of Judge Landis was an act of long-delayed justice. But the president of the Standard Oil Company makes a statement indicating clearly that the question of rebating did not enter into the case at all, and that the great fine was imposed to advance the political and chautauqua interests of Judge Landis. Anyway, it will interest every fair-minded man to read the statement of the case made by the president of the Standard Oil Company.

If the above statement is true, and we can not conceive of the president of a great corporation going before the public with falsehoods that may be easily controverted, it means: 1. That in this case, the Government's prosecution against the Standard Oil Company was not in good faith. 2. That the question of rebating did not enter into the case. 3. That the Standard Oil Company was persecuted and not prosecuted for violation of law. 4. That the decision of Judge Landis was an outrage, in reply to unreasonable clamor against the trusts and railroads. 5. That the decision is so unjust that it will not stand the test of the higher courts, and that, finally, when the people understand it, the decision will bring the people back to their senses.

According to the statement of Mr. Moffett, there has been, for a period of twelve years, a rate of 6 cents a hundred pounds on oil between Whiting, Ind., and East St. Louis, Ill. This rate was perfectly legal, so far as the Eastern Illinois was concerned, but the Alton failed to comply with a provision of the law, and file its amended tariff with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Some sleuth discovered this technical violation of law, and a suit was started against the Standard Oil Company. The trial judge was unfair and unreasonable, and, when the oil company was found guilty of a technical violation of law, by a jury, the judge imposed the maximum fine on every shipment of oil proved.

But the reader should understand that the 6-cent rate was perfectly legal on the Eastern Illinois, and that that road received one-third of the oil company's business. The reader should also understand that during the same period of twelve years there has been an open commodity rate between Whiting, Ind., and East St. Louis, of 8 cents per hundred pounds on linseed oil, and 5 cents a hundred pounds on brick. The reader should understand, also, that no opposition oil company has been paying the 18-cent rate which prevailed twelve years ago; that, in this case, according to Mr. Moffett's statement, there has been no rebating, and no suspicion of rebating.

The great fine of Judge Landis was imposed because of a technical violation of law. As Mr. Moffett says, the 6-cent rate was legal on the Eastern Illinois and his company could have given that railroad company all his business, instead of one-third of it, had he known that the Alton had failed to file its modified tariff with the Interstate Commerce Commission. How absurd it is to fine the Standard Company $29,000,000 for failure to pay an 18-cent rate when linseed oil was being shipped at 8 cents, and brick at 5 cents!

It is a curious instance of how strong public clamor is at present. Not one newspaper in twenty will print the defense of the oil company. People will continue to believe that at last the Standard Oil Company has been brought to its knees, and rejoice, in spite of the fact, if Mr. Moffett's statement is true, that it is the greatest outrage ever perpetrated in the courts of this country.

THE TIME OF FRENZIED POLITICS.

[From Leslie's Weekly, August 15, 1907.]

If, as Judge Landis appears to hold, any shipper who accepts a rate from the agent of a railroad, without taking the precaution to go or send to Washington and ascertain if that is the rate legally filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, can be indicted, found guilty, and sentenced to pay a penalty of $20,000 for every shipment, even if innocently made—then something is wrong with the law or with our courts of justice. Of course, after having fixed the maximum penalty in the case of the Standard Oil, Judge Landis can not be expected to stultify himself by fixing a lower penalty for any other offender who is haled into his court, for he has established the precedent and must abide by it. If he seeks refuge behind the allegation that the Standard Oil Company should be heavily penalized because, since its organization in 1872, covering a period of thirty-five years, its profits have been more than $700,000,000, or at an average of about $20,000,000 per annum, what sort of a penalty would he inflict on a corporation like the United States Steel Corporation, which, at its present rate of earnings, will make a profit of $700,000,000 in less than four years, or at the rate of nearly $200,000,000 a year?

Not long ago it was the proudest boast of the American people that our industries were surpassing in magnitude those of all other nations. The prosperity of the United States has been great because of the prosperity of our industrial interests. The Steel Corporation with its army of 100,000 employes, the Standard Oil with 60,000 men on its industrial pay roll, exclusive of official and clerical staff, and all the lines of manufactures which are thriving as they are in no other country, and which are fighting valiently for new markets at home and abroad, are the principal factors in securing the wealth of the American nation. The day will come when the sober judgment of those who think for themselves, and who think in the light of experiences both pleasant and bitter, who can recall other periods of prosperity as well as periods of adversity and the "soup house," will look back upon this time of frenzied politics with amazement and indignation.

VENOM AND BIAS.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express, August 5, 1907.]

Of course, the Standard will appeal from the conviction, and from such reports of the court proceedings as have come over the wire there seem to be good grounds for an appeal. Certainly it has been many years since a judge of a Federal court has shown the venom and bias that Judge Landis manifested during the trial and in the delivery of judgment and the imposition of punishment. He is very young to serve in a case so important as this—not yet 41—he was not admitted to the bar till 1891 and he has been on the bench only a little more than two years. He seems as lacking in ability, in fairness, and in poise and dignity as he is in experience, and it will be very surprising if the higher courts do not find good grounds upon which to order a new trial.

"A PRETTY HEAVY CURRENT RISK."

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel, August 7, 1907.]

The sum and substance of the Chicago suit under the Elkins Act was that the Standard had obtained from the Alton road a private rate of 6 cents per 100 pounds, whereas the legal and filed rate was 18 cents. On the face of it, and assuming that other shippers were paying the 18-cent rate, that would be a gross discrimination in favor of the Standard, for which the road was recouping itself at the expense of other shippers.

One specific question would at once occur to most readers of Judge Landis's decision: Were other shippers of petroleum paying the 18-cent rate, while the Standard paid the 6-cent rate? No such contention appears; and it is sheer assumption to say that had there been other and competing shippers they would have been "held up" for the 18-cent rate.

The chairman of the traffic association testified that the 18-cent rate was a "class" and not a "commodity" rate, and was never intended to apply to oil.

To have applied it to oil would have been, it appears, a heavy discrimination against oil, since, for example, it is shown that packing-house products were carried for 10 cents, corn meal for 7 cents, linseed oil for 8 cents, brick for 5 cents, and so on.

Then why, in the name of reason, single out the petroleum "commodity" for an 18-cent rate? Or, if the 18-cent rate was, as the prosecution seemed to contend, the only possible lawful rate, how about the multitude of shippers who got the classified "commodity" rates? Is there not some force in the contention of President Moffett?

Thousands of tons of freight have been shipped from these points during the last fifteen years under the same circumstances as the Standard shipments, and if the Standard is guilty in this case, so is practically every other shipper in this great manufacturing territory. Is there a purpose in selecting the Standard as the victim?

The Standard contends that if its 6-cent rate from the Alton was not the lawful and filed rate, it was informed that it was so by the Alton rate clerk. To that Judge Landis ruled that the shipper was bound to know otherwise by diligent inquiry.

That principle would of course apply to all shippers. They would be bound under that ruling to discover that the rate charged them for any shipment is the filed rate, at their own risk of liability to a fine of $20,000 for each case of accepting a carrier's wrong statement. That seems to put a pretty heavy current risk on shippers.

Judge Landis was not clear in his reasons for excluding testimony by the defendant as to the lawful 6-cent rate over the Eastern Illinois, by which the Standard shipped one-third of its product from Whiting to St. Louis. If it knew the Alton 6-cent rate was unlawful, why did it not ship all of its oil over the Eastern Illinois? The evidence excluded on this point seems worth something as against the general charge of deliberate and conscious violation of the law.

PLAIN GERMAN SOCIALISM.

[From the Railway World, Philadelphia, August 9, 1907.]

Probably there is not one of our readers who can not recall within his own experience twenty instances of men who have amassed comfortable fortunes, in each case far exceeding the ratio of increase of the Standard Oil Company, and yet by the reasoning of the Administration each one of these men has acquired his money by unfair methods. He has charged the highest price for his goods or services, he has given as little and gained as much in business transactions as the law would allow him, he has been thrifty and prudent in his investments, has bought low and sold high, if he is a merchant or manufacturer he has taken advantage of the necessities of manufacturers and competitors to acquire merchandise at cut prices, has undersold his competitors wherever possible in order to enlarge his markets, has paid the lowest wages consistent with the highest efficiency of his employees, in short, he has played the game of business according to the rules, he has taken the risks of failure and has kept the gains of success. The Standard Oil Company has done no more. If it is to be penalized and condemned for its successes, then every man who has seen his initial savings under his careful and prudent management grow into a considerable fortune must also be condemned.

There is no escape from this position. If large profits are immoral in one case they are wrong in every other, and since large profits for a few men and losses for the great majority are the inevitable consequences of modern business, the profits of modern business are, by the Commissioner of Corporations and by Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, emphatically and sweepingly condemned, and we arrive by an easy yet inevitable process of reasoning, at the conclusion which we have long been reluctant to admit, that the outcome of the Administration's campaign against the great corporations, wise and necessary as its early stages were, is the socialism of Karl Marx and Ferdinand La Salle, who rested their doctrines on the proposition that all wealth was the product of labor, and that no man can become rich except at the expense of his fellows.

If we were not perfectly certain that the American people were speedily recognizing this sinister development of the "square-deal" philosophy, we would be gravely alarmed for the industrial future of the United States, for certain it is that progress in commerce and industry is impossible under a system of government which without guaranteeing against the risks of failure, attempts to limit the rewards of success. We are confident, however, that in time, it may be not until President Roosevelt has been succeeded by some wiser statesman, the people will awake to the fact that the attack upon the profits of corporations is an attack upon the profits of the individual, and that the merchant, the farmer, and the small manufacturer are even more threatened by socialistic legislation and administration than the great capitalists and the captains of industry, whose gains are already assured.

A PERIL TO ALL INVESTORS.

[From the New York Times, August 6, 1907.]

It has been well-nigh universally assumed by the press and in general discussion of Judge Landis's "sentence" that the fine of $29,240,000 was imposed upon the Standard Oil trust, the veritable octopus itself, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. In many quarters, therefore, the unprecedented magnitude of the fine has been regarded merely with amusement, as, of course, a corporation that disburses $40,000,000 a year dividends and in twenty-four years has distributed among its stockholders more than half a billion dollars is able to pay this fine.

The fact is that the corporation upon which the fine was imposed is the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which has $1,000,000 of capital stock. Some warrant for the prevailing misapprehension may be found in the language used by Judge Landis in imposing the fine:

"The nominal defendant is the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, a million-dollar corporation. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, whose capital is $100,000,000, is the real defendant. This is so for the reason that if a body of men form a large corporation under the laws of one State for the purpose of carrying on business throughout the United States, and for the accomplishment of that purpose absorb the stock of other corporations, such corporations so absorbed have thenceforward but a nominal existence."

Now that Judge Landis has spoken, we suppose this is the law. Hitherto the law has been very careful to distinguish between the corporation and the holders of its capital stock. A corporation may be convicted of the most infamous crimes without making its stockholders great sinners before the Lord. The principle is laid down in Purdy's "Beach on Private Corporations" in these words:

"A corporation is an entity regardless of the persons who own all of its stock. The fact may be that one individual has become the owner of all the stock—but that does not make him and the corporation one and the same person. There is no identity between them. The owner of all the stock of a corporation does not own all its property."

These principles have been repeatedly affirmed in decisions of the courts, which are cited by the text writer whose words we quote. Judge Landis sets up a new principle. He looks beyond the "nominal" defendant corporation to its shareholders. This raises some question of interest and importance. If in the exercise of judicial discretion a fine should be imposed far exceeding the market value of all the assets of a corporation, would the stockholders be individually liable to the Government in the ratio of their holdings? Take the present case, even, if the United States marshal fails to find sufficient assets of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana to pay the fine of $29,240,000, can the Government maintain an action against the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which is the owner of the stock of the Indiana concern, for the collection of the fine?

The practice of going behind the corporation and of taking up questions of the responsibility and solvency of its shareholders broadens the discretionary field of the court. Two railroad corporations may be convicted of granting rebates in violation of laws. Upon inquiry the court ascertains that the shares of one corporation are widely distributed in the hands of "widows and orphans." In that case, we suppose, the minimum fine might be imposed. But if it should transpire that the entire capital stock of the other corporation was held, let us say, by Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Rogers, the court might cite them to appear and testify as to their private incomes as a means of determining whether the maximum penalty might be pronounced with a reasonable expectation that assets would be found to satisfy the judgment.

If the courts, following the precedent established by Judge Landis, shall adopt the policy of imposing the maximum fine of $20,000 for each violation of the rebate law, it may be imagined that the holders of corporation shares will be in a good deal of doubt about the value of their securities. Most of the great trusts, and, we presume, the majority of the great railroad systems, have been guilty of receiving or giving rebates. Upon what industrial corporation or what railroad will the vengeance of the Government next fall? It is impossible to see, and it is quite beyond conjecture how many fines mounting into the millions will be imposed.

What will be the effect upon the peace of mind of the bondholders and of the investors whose demands constitute the bond market? That market has of late been in a somewhat languid and depressed state. It will hardly be stimulated to renewed activity by Judge Landis's act. A railroad corporation now apparently prosperous and living in the fear of the law may at any time for offenses within the last three years be subjected to fines that would not only deprive the stockholders of their dividends for years to come, but would make it impossible for the corporation to pay the interest on its bonds. There has been some hope that foreign capital might be drawn upon by sales of bonds abroad for the immense additions to railroad facilities that the transportation interests of the country demand. The fine of $29,240,000 imposed upon the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and the steps taken to call the Chicago and Alton to account for granting the rebate will doubtless put an end to foreign inquiry for American bonds. This is one of the consequences of applying the extreme rigor of the law that might easily have been foreseen. But the present temper of the public toward the corporations takes account of no consequences save those incident to works of revenge and destruction.

A BLOW AT ENTERPRISE.

[From the American Grocer (New York), August 7, 1907.]

The political character of the prosecution is shown by following up the action of Judge Landis with a letter from Commissioner Herbert Knox Smith, claiming that the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly; that it has exacted too great a margin between the cost of crude and refined oil; that it has not given the people their full share of the profit derived from by-products; that its claims to efficiency "is a complete misrepresentation of facts." Everybody knows that not only has the Standard Oil Company given the world the best and most uniform quality of illuminating fluid it has ever known, but it has built up no small share of the commerce of the nation. Any corporation that carries its transactions to the sixth decimal can not be accused of a lack of efficiency.

Is the charge of extortion fair, coming as it does from Uncle Sam, charged with unjust tariff exactions and levying tribute beyond all reason from every one of 84,000,000 people? We would that Standard Oil type of efficiency was practiced by the United States Government, for it would teach the people that there is no need for waste, extravagance and unnecessary expenses. How the Standard Oil would clean out the Departments and put them on the basis of a first-class mercantile organization! The Post-Office Department would be self-sustaining; there would be no free seeds from the Agricultural bureau; no junketing excursions from all Departments. Efficiency and economy would be enforced and a lesson taught such as all nations need.

The Standard Oil put a stop to the refining of dangerous oils, at one time so bad that laws were passed by all the States to regulate the grade. It has conferred benefits on the race immeasurable in comparison with its exactions. It even contributed to the election of the Administration that is prosecuting and persecuting a corporation that ought to be a source of national pride, and claims that it has not violated the laws as charged and seems in a fair way to prove it. The course of the Government is scarcely in line with "fair play and a square deal." It is a blow at enterprise, skill, the perfection of commercial methods.

SOMETHING LIKE IT IN MAINE.

[From the Lewiston (Me.) Daily Sun, August 5, 1907.]

The sensation of Saturday was Judge Landis's imposition of the $29,000,000 fine on the Standard Oil Company The statement made by the company, of evidence that Judge Landis refused to admit, may have weight with those sufficiently learned in the law; and likely, too, with men of large business experience. It makes the case look like a persecution. We have had something like it in the enforcement (?) of some of our Maine laws.

Notice that the offenses for which these fines are inflicted were committed between September, 1903, and March, 1905. The Elkins law was enacted in February, 1903. The first offenses against that law here alleged were committed in September, 1903. The trial for those offenses came in the summer of 1907, nearly four years after the offenses were committed. Why? Why did it take the Government nearly four years to get round to a prosecution for these violators of the Elkins law? The President at that time was Theodore Roosevelt. Theodore Roosevelt was the President that does things. He had already been in office two years when those offenses were committed. Why did it take him nearly four years more to do something to the Standard Oil?

Notice, too, that those offences continued unchecked by President Roosevelt through the Presidential year 1904. How do you suppose that happened? Nineteen hundred and four, you remember, was the year that President Roosevelt was doing business with E. H. Harriman, business relating to the carrying of New York State by the Republicans. Nineteen hundred and four was the year the insurance companies made their big contributions to the Republican campaign fund. All through that year, 1904, President Roosevelt was so negligent of his duty as the Chief Executive of the nation that that horrid monster, the Standard Oil, was able to violate the Elkins law so grossly and continuously that it deserved to be punished with multimillion-dollar fines.

Judge Landis's fine of the Standard Oil is an indictment of the Roosevelt Administration.

Can you recall without a grin the President's (since election) eagerness to do something to swollen fortunes and naughty corporations?

THE CONSENSUS OF BUSINESS OPINION.

[From the Daily Banker and Stockholder (New York), August 7, 1907.]

It seems to be the consensus of intelligent business opinion that the amount of this fine is excessive and that the highest court will not concur in it to the large amount imposed, for the ends of justice scarcely require such extremes—the object of the law being remedial rather than punitive. It is unfortunate at this time when business welfare and general prosperity are so desirable that such damaging blows to market values are deemed necessary. Obedience to statute law might be produced without this wholesale penalty by which many will suffer without any wrongdoing on their part. The Standard Oil Company stock selling at $500 a share at the present rate of dividend realizes about 8 per cent. on the market value of the shares which, compared to various other industrials, is not deemed excessive. It must also be borne in mind that this corporation has done a great deal to develop and maintain the commercial importance of oil in all the world's markets and prove the progressive power of an American enterprise to successfully compete with strong foreign competition. No less powerful combination could have done this. America by this corporation has furnished the cheapest light to the world and our industry and commercial prowess have been promoted and advanced. As cooperation is the basis of an industrial life and is its organic principle, so combination is to-day primal in all successful, economical enterprise. combination is to-day primal in all successful, economical enterprise. Those persons who hold sound stocks are foolish to be shaken out under any such court ruling as this, which in reason and justice seems of very improbable confirmation and which does not affect their property except in very incidental degree.

THE SAVOR OF OPERA COMIQUE.

[From the Boston Daily Tribune, August 5, 1907.]

This is the era of the spectacular, and the $29,240,000 fine imposed by Judge Landis of Chicago upon the Standard Oil Company of Indiana fits the era to perfection. It was the spectacular that prevailed also when John D. Rockefeller was spectacularly haled to Chicago to give evidence which meant nothing and which, as the officials connected with the case well knew, could have been obtained far more readily from others interested in the management of the Standard Oil Company.

Whatever may be said of this fine which declares that the defendant company shall pay the maximum sum on each of the 1,462 counts of the indictment under which it was found guilty, the incontrovertible and sensationally spectacular fact remains that the verdict is "the biggest ever." This, of course, is an achievement of notoriety destined to entitle all who participated to at least a momentary place in the temple of fame.

Whether the glory will be more than passing is as dubious perhaps as is the likelihood that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana will ever have to pay the twenty-nine millions which it has been mulcted. The right to appeal still exists, and there is a possibility that a higher court may find elements in the case aside from those that are purely spectacular. Record breaking in the matter of fines is not necessarily contagious among the judiciary.

If the defendant company is guilty—a point on which all (sensationalists excepted) are not agreed—there is little doubt that will be made quite apparent to the court of appeals or the Supreme Court, as the case may be. But even if found guilty there is the barest possibility that a higher court may feel like lopping off at least the odd hundreds of thousands from the fine. Somewhere in the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, we believe, occurs a paragraph to the effect that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." Whether or not a corporation can expect to come beneath the protecting ægis of this amendment is, perhaps, debatable.

With all deference due to the law and its illustrious exemplars, we respectfully submit the opinion that had the honorable justice at Chicago seen fit in his wisdom to impose the minimum fine of $1,426,000 instead of the maximum of $29,240,000, the interests of justice would have been quite as well served and common sense would not have suffered, however severe might have been the shock to the speculative era.

As it is, the proceedings in the case of the People v. The Standard Oil Company of Indiana have altogether too much of the savor of opera comique to be quite impressive.

AN OPEN BID FOR PLAUDITS.

[From the Chicago Record-Herald, August 6, 1907.]

The imposing upon the Standard Oil Company of Indiana of the heaviest fine known in the history of criminal jurisprudence is the outcome of the conviction of that company for accepting rebates from a railroad in violation of the interstate-commerce law. The gross penalty of $29,240,000 is made up of maximum penalties of $20,000 each on every one of the 1,462 counts of the indictment duly sustained on the trial.

Of the temper of the court in the imposing of this enormous fine and the rather intemperate heat of its words, little need to be said to-day. There will be criticism of this wherever the text of Judge Landis's decision is read. That something besides a high sense of the justice and dignity of the laws, and a keen appreciation of outrage upon public rights, urged the court to its decidedly flamboyant declaration on the lawbreaking represented by the defendant company, is only too plain, and makes one ask why the court is making so open a bid for the plaudits of the masses in thus scathing so popular an object of public abuse.

Now that the case of the Chicago and Alton Railroad, the giver of these illegal rebates, is ordered brought before the grand jury, it remains to be seen whether or not the court will continue its high standard of causticity in its case. The Chicago and Alton Railroad has some Indiana stockholders, it is believed, who will not enthuse over any overdoing of the judicial berating and who possess a certain influence as men of standing in their communities and will, to that extent, demand fairness in remarks from the bench.

What interests the public, despite all predictions for or against the "Standard" bugaboo, is what defense is put up on behalf of the company or given out by its officials. James A. Moffet, president of the Indiana company, asserts that the company is not even technically guilty of rebating, and that the court would not permit the introduction of facts to prove this point. He says:

"The contention of the Government was that the lawful rate was 18 cents per 100 pounds between these two points. The defendant claims first that the lawful rate was 6 cents; and secondly, if 6 cents was not the lawful rate it was the rate issued to the Standard by the Alton as the lawful rate, and the Standard was justified in believing from its own investigation and from the information received from the railroad company that 6 cents was the lawful rate.

"The 18-cent rate was a 'class' and not a 'commodity' rate, and the chairman of the Chicago and St. Louis Traffic Association, the association issuing the 18-cent rate, under oath testified that it was never applied and never intended to apply to oil.

"In view of the fact that petroleum had been openly carried over the three roads from Whiting to East St. Louis for from ten to fourteen years for 6 cents, what a draft it is on human credulity for the prosecution to assert that 18 cents was the only possible legal rate. The Standard Oil Company asserts that it is not even technically guilty and that it ought never to have been prosecuted because of the claimed failure of a railroad company—which has neither been indicted nor prosecuted—to file its tariff, and that the prosecution of this defendant under the circumstances of this case is a prostitution of the spirit and the high purposes of the interstate-commerce act."

All of which leads one to note that if Judge Landis can go out of his way to indulge in caustic declamation, Mr. Moffet shows himself an artist in his rendering of the "square deal" with variations.

WHAT IT WOULD MEAN.

[From the Wall Street Daily News, August 6, 1907.]

Consensus of opinion is that Judge Landis will be overruled by the Supreme Court on the broad ground that the Constitution prohibits cruel or unusual punishments. If this decision were to stand as the law of the land, no railroad or corporation doing business with railroads would be safe from virtual confiscation. Many of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law are so crudely framed and so drastic in character that it is impossible to do business without violating them. Public opinion will never support the lodgment of tyrannous power in the Department of Justice and the courts. Suppose that in some wave of popular passion a party under such leadership as that of Bryan or Hearst should come into power—what would happen if the Landis decision is enforced? Panic and commercial ruin would follow as night and day.

The proper course of action is new legislation which shall have equal regard for the rights of the people and the rights of the corporations. The corporate form of business has existed long enough to disclose both its good and bad sides. Just simply to attack corporations is easy enough and in certain parts of the country is a cheap way of winning political preferment, but it is dangerous to the public weal to run amuck without discrimination. It must be possible to put laws on our statute books that shall be constitutional and equitable, that shall leave free play to business development. Admittedly, the Sherman antitrust law does not do this. It was a makeshift piece of legislation anyhow, which does not stand the test of time.

We have firm reliance in the Supreme Court. That august tribunal is beyond the sway of passion and prejudice. Never yet has appeal to it for justice failed. And it is the final arbiter.

DESTRUCTION NOT REFORMATION.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, August 6, 1907.]

The latest Government report dealing with the Standard Oil Company raises a question of greater public importance than is involved in the Chicago case. Despite much recent overhasty generalizing the American judicial machinery has yet to be found defective in dealing equal justice to magnate and labor leader, rich man and poor. If the Standard has broken, or is breaking the law, it will be punished in due time. Meanwhile superior courts have yet to pass upon the decision of Judge Landis. The appeal taken will involve questions of fact, law and constitutionality that can not be regarded as settled until the Supreme Court has spoken.

But the charges preferred by Herbert Knox Smith, Commissioner of Corporations, come before the bar of public opinion for review. The issue he raises involves the whole structure of to-day's commercial world. When he attacks the Standard Oil Company he strikes as well at the steel business from the profits of which Andrew Carnegie built his libraries, and the general principle of trade combination that reaches down to associations of coal dealers and grocery men. The Standard, as the most complete type of this sort of present-day business organization, has defended it on the ground that it eliminated waste in production and distribution and brought lower prices to the consumer. If this process of combination bore hard on individual producers, here and there, if it was as ruthless in reaching the goal as it has been charged with being, it was still a question, according to its defenders, whether a greater good did not result for the larger number.

Herbert Knox Smith, on the basis of an investigation by Government agents, fiercely attacks this argument. The price to the consumer would be lower at present, he claims, if the Standard Oil Company had never been organized. He claims that the real reduction came during the days when the independent and small producer still flourished. This is an invitation for the public to demand the dissolution of all these great trade combinations, including the Standard, into their integral parts, and for such laws and the enforcement of them as shall prevent such combinations in the future. The suggestion to make over the modern American business world involves a huge problem and it is a grave question whether the best interests of society would be subserved thereby. Now that it has been put forward in this official way, presumably to be followed by an administrative demand for legislation, the business men of the country, the organizers of these huge combinations, have a right to be heard. And it is time for them to put forward their side of it. In the last analysis public opinion is fair. At least it always wants to be. The greatest frankness with the public can best serve the corporations thus challenged. When both sides are in it will be time to reach a verdict.

The purpose of punishment is the correction, the reformation, of the offender, not his destruction. The end sought is the protection of society and not revenge. The blow aimed directly from Washington at the Standard Oil Company right after the court had heeded the plea of the Government prosecutors to inflict the enormous fine of $29,240,000, raises the question as to the purpose of the Administration in this dogged pursuit of the Standard.

Keeping in mind that punishment is inflicted for the protection of society the question arises, incidentally, whether society will not have to bear the burden of this heavy fine, provided the higher courts agree with the findings of Judge Landis. Will the company or the people suffer the penalty? The public is still paying anew each year the cost of the great anthracite coal strike in increased prices collected on the argument that the strike made them necessary. And to be fair must not the Government, if the Standard is forced to pay, collect from the already heavily bonded Chicago and Alton road, and then pursue the ramifications of the rebate system through such centers of trade as Cleveland, Pittsburg, St. Louis and Minneapolis and demand millions in fines from railroads and business corporations? Does anyone fancy that these great concerns, if forced to issue bonds in order to pay millions into the treasury, will not collect the amount from the people? It is hardly likely that the directors and stockholders will dip into their private purses for such amounts.

Or suppose that the collection of enormous fines involves the bankruptcy of some of these concerns. While the Standard Oil Company is not likely to quit business even if it is compelled to pay $29,240,000, the fact remains that the legal defendant in the Chicago action, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, is a concern with a total capitalization of many millions less than the fine imposed upon it. This principle, applied to a concern without a parent corporation behind it, would mean its capital punishment on the day it was forced to overstrain its credit in the effort to pay a fine. Is this method of prosecution likely to produce reformation and to protect the people? The end sought is the punishment of wrongdoing, not the persecution or destruction of great business enterprises.

MANY THINGS WORSE.

[From the Richmond (Cal.) Daily Leader, July 26, 1907.]

The people of this country are prone to attack the Standard Oil Company with or without provocation, and in doing so they do not consider what the so-called monopoly has been doing for the United States. An excerpt from an article in the current issue of Leslie's Weekly says that "the aim of the Standard has constantly been to cheapen the cost of oil to the consumer and increase the uses of petroleum in every way possible." And this is true. The men and women of to-day who have reached the age of fifty years can remember when coal oil was from forty to fifty cents per gallon, and it was hard to procure at that price. Now it can be purchased for a much less sum, and the fuel products are a great deal cheaper. As a matter of fact, according to the article in question, the public has become so accustomed to attacks on our great industries, or those of them that have been singled out for abuse that it fails to give fair consideration to both sides of the question. It is accustomed to regard the Standard Oil Company as the property of a few men, when in fact the concern belongs to more than 6,000 shareholders. Every day you hear men in Richmond denouncing the Standard Oil Company, yet it is the Standard that made the town and is maintaining it. If the works, the refinery, should close down to-morrow and remain closed for any considerable length of time, nine-tenths of the people would be compelled to move away and seek employment elsewhere. There are worse things in the world than the Standard Oil Company.

AN "UNREASONABLE, UNFAIR" REPORT.

[From the New York Times, August 5, 1907.]

The second part of the report of Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, Commissioner of Corporations, upon the petroleum industry is made public this morning. It deals with prices in the petroleum business and the profits of the Standard Oil Company, which refines substantially nine-tenths of the illuminating oil produced in the United States. The report is interesting. It shows many things. One is that the Standard Oil concern is making a great deal of money, which everybody knew before. Another is that Commissioner of Corporations Smith is unable convincingly to interpret the facts he sets forth, which is the same thing as saying that his conclusions are not demonstrated.

In general, this is the interpretation he puts upon the facts and statistics of his report:

"They demonstrate the falsity of the historic claim of the Standard Oil Company that by reason of its extraordinary efficiency it has brought prices to a point lower than would have been reached had business remained under normal competitive conditions in the hands of a number of comparatively smaller concerns."

Again, at the end of the report we find this further statement:

"The claim of the Standard that its control of the business is due to its ability to maintain low prices because of superior efficiency is a complete misrepresentation of facts."

We do not think that experienced business men, accustomed to the examination of trade statistics and familiar with economic facts and principles, would concur in the conclusions of this report. It is generally admitted that from 1866 to 1874 the business of refining and selling petroleum was carried on under competitive conditions. It may be further admitted that during the last ten years the monopoly of the Standard Oil Company has been pretty nearly established. It has produced 88 per cent. of the country's total output of illuminating oil. But something has reduced the price per gallon of export oil in barrels, that being the trade price usually selected for statistical comparison, from 30.8 cents in 1866, 20.75 cents in 1867, 21.16 cents in 1868, 24.59 cents in 1869, to 7.22 cents in 1905, and to an average of a little over 7 cents per gallon during the last ten years. Mr. Smith concludes that the "claim" that this reduction has been effected, through its extraordinary efficiency, by the Standard Oil Company is false. The plain inference from his language is that in his opinion under normal competitive conditions prices would now be lower. He has been much influenced, in reaching this conclusion, by his study of the "margins," that is, the difference between the cost of crude oil and the selling price of refined oil which his tables exhibit.

It seems to us that the picture presented by statistical tables and diagrammatic representations of the history of prices in the petroleum industry is that of a business carried on substantially under the conditions that govern most business intelligently managed in a modern way. They seem to us, further, to show that the chief, the dominating, influence in lowering the price of illuminating oil to consumers during the past forty years has been that very "efficiency" of the Standard Oil Company from which Mr. Smith withholds all credit. It is true that in the diagram showing the course of prices the selling price of refined uniformly rises with the price of crude, and sometimes rises disproportionately, thus increasing the apparent margin of profit. But it is true, also, and the fact is one which no business man or economist would overlook, that the price of refined uniformly falls with the price of crude. Why should the Standard Oil Company ever reduce the selling price of its refined product, thus diminishing its profits, if it be true that it has a controlling monopoly of the oil business? If the Standard is as wicked, as grasping, and as remorseless as it is painted, we do not see why the diagram line of refined selling price should not run straight across the page quite disregarding the ups and downs of the crude price line. If a monopoly be the real thing, if it controls, and if it have no conscience, it must be a fool to throw away money by lowering the selling price of its products merely because of a drop in the price of its raw material.

Mr. Smith argues that the "margin" shows an extortionate profit. In his judgment from seven-tenths of a cent to one cent a gallon "margin" between the cost of crude and the price of refined would constitute "a good profit on the business," while during the last ten years the "margin" actually maintained by the Standard has ranged from 5.3 cents to 6.6 cents. Yet he says that "independent competitors though small and weak, do survive, and do business at prices which are deliberately reduced by the Standard within the small competitive areas reached by these independents, and which are much lower than the average prices received by the Standard throughout the country." If the "margin" difference between a fair profit and the Standard's actual profit is as great as Mr. Smith believes, the petroleum business in all these years has simply been the most inviting field for capital investment in the whole world. If his belief is well founded, the independent competitors would not have been small and weak, but mighty and rich. They would have grappled with the Standard, they would have broken up its monopoly.

The evident truth is, and it completes the picture, that the Standard Oil Company has been "efficient." Some of the best business brains in the world have labored in its service. The economies due not only to vast operations but to high intelligence and great keenness have enabled it to cut down producing cost. In this way chiefly it has kept the field substantially to itself. Its policy has been to maintain prices always high enough to return enormous profits, yet low enough to give the independent competitors many anxious days and nights. Undoubtedly the "margin" between the price it pays for crude and the price it receives for refined has been and is much greater than the similar "margin" out of which the independent competitors get their profits. "Efficiency" makes the difference. These competitors would, of course, be glad to reap greater profits through higher prices. Do they voluntarily remain "small and weak?" And here stands forth somewhat conspicuously a truth in conflict with Mr. Smith's conclusion. It can not be doubted, we think, that if Mr. Rockefeller and the men about him had never been born, and if no other men of equal capacity had organized and built up the great Standard Oil business, and had "normal competition" always existed in the industry through the strife one with another of many companies with a few millions of capital, the price paid by consumers in this country for illuminating oil would now be much higher than the actual quoted prices. That is what the price tables and diagrams not only of the reports of the Bureau of Corporations, but of Miss Tarbell's book, appear to show and demonstrate when interpreted in an unbiased way by the light of human reason and business experience.

It may be admitted, as Mr. Smith asserts in his report, that the Standard has made "persistent use of the worst industrial methods;" that it has destroyed the business competitors; that it has secured "excessive profits for the small group of men" who have dominated the business; that it has resorted to many unfair methods, among which the secret railroad rebate is conspicuous. But even when these things remain undisputed, and we know of no disinterested person who disputes them, it appears in view of other undisputed facts in the history of the petroleum industry, that the conclusions of the report made to the President by the Commissioner of Corporations are in many substantial respects unreasonable, unfair, and not sustained by the evidence.

WAIT FOR THE HIGHER COURT.

[From the New Haven (Conn.) Journal and Courier, August 6, 1907.]

* * * Back of everything that has been written or spoken there has worked to the disadvantage of this colossal corporation the growing and not altogether reasonable prejudice against the immense fortunes which have been accumulated in this country by what are known as the captains of industry. For a while they were regarded as the representatives of that indomitable commercial will and skill which was forcing this nation to the front rank among the producing nations of the earth. It is not such a very long time ago that they were referred to in the speech of national pride. Now, owing to the bitterness which has been engendered as a consequence of wholesale denunciation of wealth, men and corporations have been made to suffer, not so much because of the possession of a fortune, as because of the size of the fortune they possess. It has been a curious growth in prejudice and while we hate as much as another the unfair and dishonest accumulation of wealth, and in particular the conscienceless use of it to control houses of legislation, it is evident that the time has come, as a direct result of this spectacular court decision, when sober and thinking men must measure corporate action with clear understanding of all of the influences which have worked to make it powerful. * * *

We are not engaged in the self-imposed task of either defending or condemning the Standard Oil Company in this connection. We know too little of the facts involved to speak confidently upon either side of the question, and we decline explicitly to take a hand in the game of wholesale denunciation of rich men because they are rich, and because those who are not rich enjoy it. It is known that great fortunes have been made in a manner no longer tolerated by the law. It is known that possessors of wealth have been condemned for no better reason than that they were known to be wealthy. It is known that unreasonably prejudice has played havoc with the public judgment of human motives for political purposes. If the pendulum of human emotions has swung too far in one direction it is the duty of intelligent men to see that it does not swing too far in the opposite direction, and this they can best do by patiently awaiting the voice of a higher court before accepting Judge Landis as the Moses to lead us out of our troubles. Costly mistakes have been made, but it is yet to be proved that they were the mistakes of the criminal instinct.

A FOREIGN PLEA FOR FAIR PLAY.

[From the Petroleum Review of London, June 22, 1907.]

The garbled report of the Commissioner of Corporations seems to suggest some criminal offense by reason of the Standard's refusal to transport oil to competitive refineries. This argument is illogical and absurd, and the inference to be drawn from it is that the Commissioner is ignorant of the most simple principle of business—never use your finances and brains for the benefit of a competitor. Again the Standard appears to have committed that unpardonable offense of hitting upon the transport of oil in bulk—"a much cheaper and safer system, which reduces the cost of marketing greatly." Here, we presume, is an attempt to bring out the reason why the Standard has "deliberately destroyed competition," a conclusion arrived at without even childlike reasoning. As a matter of fact, we know that competition in the American oil industry has always been keen, and to-day it is keener than ever before, the only complaint of the Standard's competitors being that, owing to its remarkable organization and facilities—both the results of careful thought-out plans, which, having been matured at the risk of vast sums of money, it is able to strike so narrow a margin between buying, refining and selling that the great difficulty is to make sufficient profits.

As to the statement that the Standard is controlled by less than a dozen men we would put this down as a lie direct, for it is well known to everyone that the stockholders number over six thousand, while each of the associated concerns likewise have their general body of shareholders.

APPENDIX 3.

THE SANTA FE REBATE CASE.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
December 31, 1907.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions, I submit the following report as to the recent prosecution and conviction of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company for a violation of the statutes forbidding and making penal discrimination by common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and as to the circular letter recently and widely published, headed "The Santa Fe Rebate Case," and signed by E. P. Ripley, president of the above-mentioned corporation. On September 1, 1906, Oscar Lawler, esq., United States attorney for the southern district of California, addressed to the Department the following letter:

"Yesterday a young man named V. A. Sappenfield was held to answer to the superior court of this county for the crime of embezzlement, preferred against him by the Santa Fe Railroad Company, the amount involved being the sum of $200. Sappenfield, it seems, has been for four or five years past revising clerk in the freight department of the corporation named, and in conversation with one of the police detectives stated the manner in which the railroad had managed the giving of rebates to shippers receiving and sending goods over its lines during the period of his employment. The detective reported the matter to me, stating that the matter had been brought up in general conversation with the prisoner while on his way from San Francisco, where he had been residing for a few months past, and where he was arrested. I immediately called upon the prisoner at the county jail, and he went into the matter in considerable detail and in a manner which convinces me that his statements are correct.

"He gives the name of a number of local business houses who are large shippers who have received rebates on interstate traffic, and said that he could in a very brief time point out places at which evidence could be found, if given access to the records of the railway corporation. It has been rumored that the officials of the railway company are already somewhat apprehensive and disposed to drop the charge of embezzlement preferred against Sappenfield. This may or may not be correct.

"The venire will be issued for the grand jury on next Tuesday, returnable during the following week. I deemed this matter of sufficient importance and the information sufficiently trustworthy to justify taking steps toward accomplishing a thorough investigation, and submit the matter to you with the request that an officer of the Department of Justice or the Department of Commerce and Labor be detailed to cooperate with me in securing evidence for presentation to the grand jury."

On September 25, 1906, my predecessor replied by wire in the words following:

"I suggest that you proceed with the investigation before the grand jury in the Santa Fe rebate cases. It is impracticable to furnish you with assistance from the Department of Commerce and Labor."

In accordance with these instructions, the United States attorney, when the grand jury had been impaneled, caused subpœnas to be issued to various employees of some local business houses and to certain officials of the railroad company, requiring their attendance as witnesses before the grand jury and the production of certain records. Thereupon the said witnesses all appeared by the counsel of the railroad company, and filed motions to quash the several subpœnas upon a variety of grounds, none of which disclosed any reason why the production of the papers in question could be in anywise injurious either to the railway company or to the witnesses summoned, if they were conscious of innocence. These motions, some 14 in number, having been fully argued, were denied by the court. After some further controversy and under threat of a proceeding for contempt, a portion of the evidence called for was finally produced by the railroad company, but when another subpœna was issued requiring the production of certain tissue copy books, and a motion to quash this subpœna had been made, argued, and overruled by the court, the railroad company sought to obtain a writ of error to the Supreme Court from the denial of the last-mentioned motion, and, in the meantime, to secure a stay until the decision of the question, which, of course, would have meant a long delay in the proceedings. Judge Wellborn having refused to grant this stay, the railroad company thereupon filed a bill in equity against its own auditor and a clerk in his office, who had custody of the papers desired, and the United States attorney and marshal, asking that they be all perpetually enjoined from the production or requiring the production of the papers called for in the subpœna, and asked for a temporary restraining order to the same effect. What passed in connection with this restraining order is thus stated by the United States attorney in his report:

"In chambers District Judge Wellborn indicated that he would refuse to grant any such order. On the following morning counsel for the railway company, without notice to my office, appeared in the chambers of Circuit Judge Ross, and in some way created upon the part of the latter the impression that the signing of the order had been practically agreed upon by Judge Wellborn, and, owing to the illness of the latter and his inability to be at his chambers, Judge Ross signed the preliminary restraining order, believing that he was acting in accordance with the views of Judge Wellborn previously expressed. Judge Ross immediately notified me of his action, and, upon my advising him of the facts, forthwith ordered counsel for the railway company to appear at his chambers and dissolved the restraining order, but unfortunately after the return time of the subpœnas. It was, therefore, necessary to issue another subpœna, which was made returnable a few days later, and a second bill in equity was filed, similar in form and seeking the same relief, which was peremptorily denied by Judge Ross in chambers, who was obliged, in the course of the argument, to severely rebuke counsel for the railway company for his abusive language and discourteous demeanor, and took occasion to comment upon the circumstances under which the former restraining order had been obtained."

The subpœna lastly above mentioned called for the production of tissue copy books relating to transactions for the years 1904 and 1905, and until August 1, 1906, and in the bill for an injunction the railroad company used the following language:

* * * "Said copy books contain copies of about 60,000 vouchers and other papers which were issued and made, and said copies thereof made in the years 1904, 1905, and 1906, during which time your orators' gross earnings on business done west of Albuquerque, N. Mex., amounted to more than $50,000,000;" * * *

This bill, of course, was sworn to. After Judge Ross had refused to pass the restraining order on the bill, the company's auditor appeared with five of the tissue copy books called for, the earliest of which contained transactions dated about July 1, 1906, and stated that all the books relating to transactions of earlier dates had been burned a long time previously. These facts appear to be relevant in connection with the statement in Mr. Ripley's letter that "this investigation continued for nearly three months, during which time the railway company was called upon to furnish, and did furnish, a large number of books and papers, and was submitted to what appeared to be a general inquisition with respect to all its business for the preceding three years."

While the investigation was in progress before the grand jury and almost immediately after my assumption of the office of Attorney-General I was called upon by Mr. Gardiner Lathrop, on behalf of the railroad company, and requested, in substance, to direct the United States attorney to abandon the proceeding or, at all events, to suspend it until the Interstate Commerce Commission could make an inquiry respecting the transactions of the company which were then under consideration by the grand jury. Mr. Lathrop told me, in substance, that the proceeding was frivolous and vexatious, originated in ill will toward the company and a desire for notoriety on the part of the United States attorney, and involved a hardship to the company in that its employees were called away from their legitimate duties and deprived of the use of its records, while it was, and always had been, ready to give any information which could be reasonably asked for, and wished to have its books and papers examined by an expert from the Interstate Commerce Commission or this Department, who could judge of the significance of any entries intelligently and impartially. Ascertaining that the Interstate Commerce Commission had taken no action looking toward such an inquiry as he desired, I refused to interfere. Mr. Lathrop subsequently submitted the matter to yourself and, if I am correctly informed, made an application to the Interstate Commerce Commission to order the inquiry pending which he had asked that this Department require the proceedings in Los Angeles to be stayed, but the Commission declined to take any action in the premises.

The grand jury, as the result of the investigation thus conducted, found two indictments, one containing 10 and the other 66 counts, each of said counts charging the company with a separate instance of discrimination. The defendant, having pleaded not guilty, the case was, in due time, tried before a petit jury, Judge Wellborn presiding, and the following facts were developed by the proof:

On June 15, 1905, a tariff was published by which the rate on lime from Nelson, Ariz., to Barstow and points south, in California, was fixed at $3.50 per ton in minimum carload lots of 40,000 pounds; otherwise expressed, $70 per car. Notwithstanding this tariff rate, the evidence showed that in every instance, without exception, where said minimum rate was applicable, it was disregarded, and in lieu thereof the amount of freight due was determined by charging for the actual weight at the rate of $3.50 per ton, whether the car contained 20,000 pounds or 80,000 pounds. During the period involved the company had no scales at Nelson, and the quantity of lime loaded in the cars was only estimated by the shipper. Under such circumstances the station agent was required by his printed instructions to state in the waybill the minimum weight of 40,000 pounds, and the minimum rate of $70, which he did in all but 7 out of about 350 waybills, notwithstanding it was ascertained by railroad scales en route that the great majority of the cars contained from 60,000 to 80,000 pounds of lime.

The alleged "rebates" were given in two ways: First, and principally, by a change or "correction" on the face of the favored waybills, at the Los Angeles freight office, by reducing the weight and freight from the established minimum to the actual weight; secondly, in some of the cases where the full amount of freight, according to the tariff, had been paid by third parties, the freight bills were forwarded by the latter to The Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company, which, in turn, put in claims "for overcharge of freight" against the railroad company for the difference between the amount of freight paid, according to the tariff, and the amount based upon actual weight.

Up to December 12, 1905, the changed way and freight bills, or claims for "overcharges," as the case might be, came to the attention of the auditor, but on the last-mentioned date Mr. Gregson, chief clerk in the office of Mr. W. G. Barnwell, general freight agent at Los Angeles, wrote the auditor a letter in the words following:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., December 12, 1905.

------ Minimum on lime.

Mr. W. G. TAYLOR, Auditor Building.

DEAR SIR: For your information have instructed Mr. Pate to protect actual weight on lime shipments from Nelson to Los Angeles and other southern California points. We will not change the established minimum of 40,000 pounds, but will protect actual weight, minimum 30,000 pounds. This for the reason that the regular established minimum from Tehachapi and other lime-producing points is 30,000, and we leave the minimum of 40,000 pounds in order to have shippers load the cars up as near capacity as possible.

Yours, truly, W. G. BARNWELL, G. F. A.

After the receipt of this letter by the auditor in practically no instance was any explanation called for, and the "corrections" were made and apparent rebates allowed as a matter of course. There were also received in evidence other communications between employees of the company relating to the matter in controversy, such as the following:

Telegram from Barnwell to the agent at Escondido, dated July 12, 1905.

Protect actual weight, 15 tons lime from Nelson.

Letter October 9, 1905, from Taylor, auditor, to Barnwell.

Nelson to Los Angeles waybill No. 28, dated September 16, covers shipment of lime consigned to J. S. Schirm, on which rate of ——— has been applied. Weight used, 38,700 pounds; minimum is 40,000 pounds. Please advise if we shall protect this basis, having no authority or file to cover your "telephone G. F. O. M-9-22." ("M" being the initial of Myers, an employee in the freight office, said letter being marked "O. K., W. G. Barnwell," meaning that the telephone authority was correct.)

There were a large number of letters similar to the one last quoted.

Memorandum in local freight agent's files.

Protect actual weight on Schirm's cars from Nelson.

W. G. BARNWELL.

Letter dated January 27, 1906, Barnwell, freight agent, to Davidson, auditor.

With this I am handing you claim of the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company, overcharge weight shipment of lime, covered by Nelson-Redondo waybill No. 22, October 26. Protect, please, weight of 32,500 pounds, at the rate of $3.50, making refund to Mr. Schirm.

There were numerous letters to the same effect as the last, accompanying as many different claims of the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company for rebate of "overcharges of freight," each of which was accompanied by a large amount of correspondence between different employees of the company, in none of which is there any complaint for loss of lime en route or any claim for damages on account thereof. There was no intimation in any of the company's books or records of anything in the nature of a "compromise of loss claims" in connection with the matters in question, nor was there anything of that sort in the Grand Canyon Company's books. At the trial, however, this Gregson, chief clerk as above stated of Mr. Barnwell, the company's general freight agent, although admitting having written the letter first above quoted, swore that the statement therein contained as to the instructions given to the local freight agent was untrue, and that the repayments were in compromise of claims for losses from damage in transit.

Mr. Gregson also testified at the trial that, because of the reliability and accuracy of the shipper's means of weighing, the railway was obliged to accept its billing when weights were questioned. The evidence showed, as above stated, that the shipper did not weigh the lime at all, but only estimated the quantity shipped, and that in all but 7 out of more than 300 instances the shipments were billed at the minimum fixed by the tariff without regard to the actual weight, which in many instances ran from 60,000 to 80,000 pounds.

It further appeared from the defendant's witnesses that accounts of claims for loss and damage of goods in transit and for claims of overcharges of freight and the investigation and payment of such claims were kept entirely distinct and separate, and that the rebates in question were based upon claims for overcharges of freight and were so accounted for, and there was in the books of the favored cement company an account headed "Santa Fe rebates."

The meaning of the expression "protect actual weight" is well known, and it certainly does not mean a compromise of a claim for loss or damage, according to the Department's information.

An employee of the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company, who had practical charge of all of its dealings with the railway company, was called as a witness by the Government; he was not cross-examined in any way concerning any alleged disputes over the loss of lime between Nelson and points of destination in southern California, nor was he asked to explain the claims which were prepared by him and paid by the railway company for "overcharges of freight" and which Mr. Ripley's letter states were paid "in compromise" of such losses of lime. One John S. Schrim, the only other person with whom it is suggested that disputes as to loss of lime took place, was in the court room throughout the trial. The company did not see fit to call him to the witness stand and give him the opportunity either to corroborate Gregson or to decline to testify as to self-incriminating matters. An agent of the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company at San Diego, through whose hands had passed some of the shipments on account of which rebates were allowed, was in attendance as a witness, and he also was not called by the defendant to sustain the testimony of Gregson, which testimony is assumed in Mr. Ripley's open letter to have been not only true, but undisputed.

Mr. Ripley says in his letter:

"Judge Wellborn refused to submit to the jury any evidence tending to show that the remission of small parts of the freight was made in carrying out a compromise whereby Schirm, for his company, agreed to stand the loss of lime and the railway company agreed to waive the freight; although if Schirm had paid the freight and sued for loss of lime he might perhaps upon the same evidence have recovered for both lime and freight. In other words, the evidence excluded tended to show that what was done amounted to a short method of settling claims for loss."

In point of fact, the evidence to which Mr. Ripley refers was received subject to exception and, after the conclusion of the testimony, was excluded from the consideration of the jury, the motion of the Government to that effect being sustained, after argument, by the court. In imposing sentence, Judge Wellborn said, with regard to this evidence:

"To the claim by defendant's counsel that the testimony which was stricken out by the court showed that these concessions were bona fide settlements of claims against the defendant for loss of goods in transit, made under the belief that the law permitted such settlements, and that this evidence, although stricken from the record, should be taken into account in determining the degree of punishment, I have given careful attention. That such evidence may be properly considered by me at this time will be conceded, but I am unable to accept counsel's view as to the effect of that evidence. It falls far short of convincing me that the concessions were bona fide settlements of claims; on the contrary, there are many circumstances which point to the conclusion that such was not the nature of the concessions, but that many of them, particularly the later ones, were the results of a preconceived plan by the defendant to deviate from its published tariff in the interest of a preferred shipper."

Although expressed with great consideration for the defendant and its witnesses, this statement by the court can be interpreted only as meaning that the evidence excluded from the consideration of the jury appeared to the judge not only legally inadmissible, but probably in great part untrue. The jury convicted the defendant corporation on every count of the indictments. Mr. Ripley asks, commenting upon this verdict and referring to the witness, Gregson: "What incentive had this clerk to violate his strict orders from his superiors to conform to the law?" It is certainly possible, and, on the whole, seems probable, that the jury may not have believed that the clerk in question had any such strict orders to conform to the law, and therefore did not violate the orders which his superiors had never given him. If such was in fact their belief it was, of course, needless for them to speculate as to what incentive he might or might not have had for a disobedience of which they did not believe him guilty.

In the opinion of Judge Wellborn, already cited, the court says:

"The defendant, after a fair trial, before an impartial jury, with able representation by attorneys of high standing and eminent attainments, has been convicted of the offenses charged in the indictment, and it now only remains for the court to pronounce against it the sentence of the law.

"I am satisfied that the evidence shows, as was succinctly and forcibly stated by Mr. Lawler, the district attorney, that the concessions were intentionally and systematically made, and it is hard to believe that the defendant did not know that they were unlawful departures from its established tariff. At all events, ignorance of the law, under the circumstances of this case, would imply a degree of negligence well-nigh equivalent to guilty knowledge.

"These latter considerations will not permit me to classify the present case as one which calls for the lowest penalty the law allows. "* * * I must * * * pronounce a sentence which, while not unduly severe, will yet effectively serve as a perpetual warning to all persons against like offenses in the future."

The court then sentenced the defendant corporation to pay a fine of $5,000 (one-fourth of the maximum penalty) for each of the 66 offenses of which it had been convicted.

From the foregoing statement of the facts in this case it appears that the defendant corporation was accused by one of its former employees, whose enmity it had incurred by causing his prosecution for a criminal offense, of committing a long series of violations of the interstate commerce law; that its course, while these charges were under investigation, was disingenuous, obstructive, and suggestive of conscious guilt; that it was indicted by the grand jury for 76 such violations upon evidence obtained from its own records, although, according to its statement and the testimony of its officers, a large part of the records which might have shown many further violations of law had been burned, the circumstances under which the destruction of these records was asserted being, to say the least, very suspicious; that when it was brought to trial it professed to explain the rebates charged against it as compromises of claims by the shippers for losses, an explanation inconsistent with the entries in its own books, and which it failed to sustain by corroborating proof readily obtainable from friendly witnesses; that some of the evidence it offered was, indeed, held legally inadmissable by the court, but this proof was, in fact, produced, and in passing sentence the court, in substance, pronounced such evidence unworthy of credit; that it was convicted by the jury on every count of the indictment, and its violations of the law were declared by the court to have been "intentionally and systematically made;" finally, that its penalty was fixed by the court at only one-fourth of the maximum, after a careful consideration of all the attendant circumstances and with a view to preventing such intentional and systematic disregard of the law in the future.

After the publication of Mr. Ripley's letter, the United States attorney asked the permission of this Department to publish a reply to it in the shape of a letter to Mr. Ripley himself. In making this request Mr. Lawler said, referring to Mr. Ripley:

"In consideration of the fact that he reflects in his signed statement (if correctly quoted) not only upon the court but upon the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Department of Justice, and more particularly upon my office and conduct, I respectfully submit to you the inclosed communication, which I propose as an open letter to be published in the Railway Age as a rejoinder to Ripley's statement and to be handed to the daily press also for publication.

"Ordinarily I am decidedly averse to newspaper controversy of any sort, realizing that 'to-day's papers make to-morrow's fires.' Under the circumstances, however, I am constrained to feel that where a defendant has not only been guilty of a willful violation of the law, but has countenanced perjury by its employees, in its efforts to escape punishment, it should not be permitted to go unchallenged in the statement of untruth, especially where the effort to reflect upon the administration is so apparent."

On December 7, 1907, the Department replied:

"I am compelled to say that the Department can not sanction the publication of your letter. It appreciates the grave impropriety of public comment on a judge's official acts, especially on the part of an unsuccessful suitor or its officers. But one impropriety of this character can not be corrected by another, and your letter contains reflections upon the railroad company and its officers, which, whether well-founded or not (and the Department is not to be understood as intimating that they are ill founded), seem to the Department inappropriate in a public prosecutor."

It has been the consistent policy of the Department to discourage and, so far as possible, prevent newspaper controversies between its subordinates and those whose enmity they might incur through the faithful discharge of their public duties, and its course in this instance has been in accordance with this policy. But I feel it my duty in closing this report to say that the charges made by the officers and counsel of this corporation against the United States attorney in connection with the matters in the present report appear to have been unfounded and unjustifiable, and the comments and suggestions contained in Mr. Ripley's letter regarding the judge who tried and sentenced his corporation constitute unwarrantable reflections upon a judicial officer respecting the discharge of his duties as such which are wholly indefensible, both in form and substance, and deserve the condemnation of all citizens solicitous to protect the dignity and independence of our courts.

I remain, yours, respectfully, CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

APPENDIX 4.

COMMUNICATION—THE SANTA FE REBATE CASE.

To the Editors:

In reply to your inquiry as to the recent heavy fine imposed upon the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe by a United States court at Los Angeles, I beg to make the following statement:

From April, 1905, and for some time before that, the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company was making and shipping lime at Nelson, then only a siding on the Santa Fe line in Arizona.

Up to about April, 1905, the minimum carload of lime from Nelson was 30,000 pounds. To conserve equipment, especially in view of the fact that cars had to be furnished at Nelson from long distances, the minimum was raised to 40,000 pounds; but it remained at 30,000 from all points competing with Nelson in the southern California markets.

Soon after this change Mr. Schirm, manager of the lime and cement company at Nelson, found that one of his carloads of lime weighed on arrival at Los Angeles less than 40,000 pounds. He was selling by railroad weight and his customer refused to pay for more than that weight. He complained to the chief clerk in the freight department at Los Angeles that he could not afford to lose his lime and the freight, too; that he was charged freight on 40,000 pounds, the minimum, at $3.50 per ton; that he was selling according to railroad weight at about $9 per ton delivered at Los Angeles; that he was positive that more than 40,000 pounds was loaded into every car. He explained the method of loading, which was by means of a small ore car filled at the kilns and run on a track to the Atchison car. This ore car had been repeatedly tested and found to hold 800 pounds and more of lime, and tally was kept so that Mr. Schirm was certain that it unloaded more than fifty times into every Atchison car sent out. He stated that the lime cost him at Nelson about $3.50 per ton, but that he would waive the loss of the lime if the railway company would waive the freight above the actual weight as shown at destination. The clerk to whom this complaint was made concluded that the lime and cement company was suffering a loss. He suspected that the weights as shown by the track scales were not accurate. He may also have felt that the increase of the minimum carload at Nelson to 40,000 pounds put Mr. Schirm's company at some disadvantage, competing points having not only a lower minimum but a lower rate. Therefore, without consulting his superiors, he agreed with Mr. Schirm that if the latter would waive any claim for loss of lime the freight would be reckoned at the actual weight as shown by the track scales at destination. Similar complaints were made from time to time as cars showed short weight, and the same arrangement was made. The result was that out of a total movement of about 400 cars, carrying nearly 10,000 tons, 78 cars showed at destination a weight short of 40,000 pounds per car, the total shortage of the 78 cars aggregating a little over 100 tons and on these 100 tons Mr. Schirm's company was not required to pay freight. On these 78 carloads the freight reckoned according to the tariff would have been $70 per car, or $5,460, while in fact the shipper paid about $400 less than that amount, the difference allowed ranging from 35 cents to $13 per car.

In the summer of 1906 Virgil A. Sappenfield, revising clerk in the local freight offices of the Santa Fe at Los Angeles, was found to have embezzled money. For this he was arrested. He pleaded guilty as to a small sum and was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for ninety days. After his arrest and while his case was pending he made threats that he would get even with the railway company, and accordingly placed himself in communication with the United States attorney, by whom he was taken before the United States grand jury at Los Angeles in October, 1906, and a long investigation into the business of the Santa Fe began. This investigation continued for nearly three months, during which time the railway company was called upon to furnish, and did furnish, a large number of books and papers, and was subjected to what appeared to be a general inquisition with respect to all its business for the preceding three years. From all this came two indictments against the railway company, and only two—one of sixty-six and the other of ten counts. Every count in the first indictment was based upon a concession with respect to one of these 78 carloads of lime. The ten counts in the other indictment were based on refunds in cases where Schirm's company had paid the full $70 on cars that showed short weight.

Of these indictments the one containing sixty-six counts came on for trial in October, 1907, before Judge Wellborn, of the United States court at Los Angeles. Not wishing to stand upon any technicalities, nor to cause a useless expenditure of time on the part of the court, the railway company, in accordance with a notice previously given to the United States attorney, admitted in open court for the purposes of the trial many of the formal facts charged in the indictment, such as the organization of the railway company, the movement of the lime, and the amounts paid. This admission, although of undisputed facts, saved the Government considerable expense and shortened the trial by several days.

Judge Wellborn refused to submit to the jury any evidence tending to show that the remission of small parts of the freight was made in carrying out a compromise whereby Schirm, for his company, agreed to stand the loss of lime and the railway company agreed to waive the freight; although if Schirm had paid the freight and sued for loss of lime he might perhaps upon the same evidence have recovered for both lime and freight. In other words, the evidence excluded tended to show that what was done amounted to a short method of settling claims for loss.

This ruling of the court virtually amounted to a direction to the jurors to find the railway company guilty as charged in the indictment, and they brought in a verdict accordingly. This was filed on October 11, 1907, and on November 7 Judge Wellborn sentenced the company to pay a fine of $5,000 on each of the sixty-six counts, or a total of $330,000. Execution was stayed for thirty days, pending preparations for an appeal.

Realizing that in this country the security of persons and property depends mainly upon our courts, and realizing also that as a rule our judiciary is wonderfully free from suspicion of improper motives, it has been my rule not to make public any resentment or indignation I may have felt at judicial decisions, and in this case I believe the court to have erred from a misunderstanding of the conditions and not from a desire to be sensational. I refrain from comment, therefore, except to put before fair-minded business men these questions:

What incentive had this clerk to violate his strict orders from his superiors to conform to the law?

If there was no incentive, is it not more than a fair presumption that he did not intend to violate the law?

If without incentive and without intent, he did under a strict technical construction, violate the law to the extent of paying $400, should his employing company, the officers of which knew nothing of the transaction, be mulcted for $330,000?

Does the punishment fit the crime?

E. P. RIPLEY,
President Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

CHICAGO, ILL., November 23, 1907.

[Editorial reprinted from the Railway Age, November 29, 1907.]

We have secured from E. P. Ripley, president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, a statement, which appears on another page, regarding the recent conviction and sentence of this railway company at Los Angeles, Cal., for alleged rebating. Mr. Ripley's communication is clear and candid and shows that every element that usually enters into a crime was lacking in the alleged offense. It seems beyond serious question that the railway clerk who made the deductions from the freight bills of the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company believed that he was acting properly. The officials of the road did not authorize and knew nothing about the transaction; and even if they had they could have had no motive in giving a secret rebate, since the Santa Fe is the only road over which the Grand Canyon Lime and Cement Company can ship. The railway did not gain anything by the action of its employee, since the shipper could have secured through the claim department or by a lawsuit after the charges were paid all or more than the portions of the charges that were remitted before they were paid. Finally, nobody was harmed. It may be said that the Santa Fe should have avoided the appearance of evil; but it is not usually considered just to punish for acts that appear evil after it has been shown that they were not so. It may be said that the road, by the unauthorized act of its employee, was at least guilty of a technical violation of the law; but is it not amazing that there should be imposed even upon a corporation fines of $330,000 for merely technical and nominal offenses? The fact that there could be found a United States district attorney to prosecute, a jury to convict, and a Federal judge to impose so enormous a penalty in this case illustrates the extent to which the minds of all classes have been poisoned against the railways by the agitation for drastic public regulation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I move that 10,000 extra copies of the message of the President be printed. It is the best Democratic doctrine I have ever heard emanating from a Republican source.

The motion was agreed to.

INQUIRY AS TO CERTAIN WESTERN LAND GRANTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas at divers times various railroads and other corporations have received large grants of public lands of the United States, under and by virtue of acts of the Congress, containing conditions to the effect that such lands should be sold to actual settlers only, or in quantities not exceeding for any one purchaser a limit fixed by the act relating thereto, or at a price per acre not greater than an amount mentioned in the act authorizing such grant, to the end that such lands might promptly become the homes of citizens of the United States; and

Whereas it is currently reported and widely believed that the Department of Justice has information to the effect that certain of the corporations aforesaid, or their alleged successors in title, having obtained colorable title to large tracts of land within a State or States of the Pacific slope by virtue of the grants above mentioned, and still holding considerable portions thereof, have violated or evaded the equitable and salutary conditions so as aforesaid imposed by the Congress upon such grants for the public good; yet the Senate is not advised that any action has been taken by the Department of Justice to enforce the said conditions or restore the said lands to the public domain: Now therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate what information, if any, has been received, and what action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Justice with respect to the matters and things in the preamble to this resolution set forth.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from New Jersey will give me a moment——

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think he will see that while the resolution is quite long it is more a recital of beliefs than an assertion of facts.

I had occasion to visit the western country last summer, and I became acquainted with conditions there which appeared to me to be very anomalous. I was told by those who knew, and there is no disputing it, that large areas of land are held by railroads and other corporations, which came into their possession through grants for military roads, and that those corporations refuse absolutely to comply with the conditions upon which they had received the land, and would not sell. I am merely asking for information from the President in regard to the same, with a view to learning what the Department of Justice is doing or is going to do.

I do not see why the Senator from New Jersey should object. Of course he has that right, and I must submit if he insists.

Mr. KEAN. I thought the resolution was rather a long one, and I should like to have it go over.

Mr TILLMAN. I should like to have it read again. Perhaps the Senator would not find any reason to object if he heard it again.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to examine it, also.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it goes over, it will go over until Monday.

Mr. KEAN. That is a very short time.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator from New Jersey to withhold his objection for a moment, as I desire to say a word.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I think I know the tract of land involved in the railroad grant to which the Senator from South Carolina refers. I take it it is what is commonly known as and called the "Oregon and California railroad grant," now the Southern Pacific, extending through——

Mr. TILLMAN. There are also lands owned by the Northern Pacific.

Mr. FULTON. In the same category?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. There may be lands owned by the Northern Pacific on the same conditions; of that I am not advised; but there is a railway grant in the State of Oregon which occupies very much the situation outlined by the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina. The grant was made by Congress some years ago; I think some time in the seventies. The grant was coupled with a condition that the lands should be sold to actual settlers only at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. A great deal of that land is still held by the railroad company, and the railroad company refuses to sell it at $2.50 an acre. That is a notorious fact. I myself have had some correspondence with the company in an effort to induce it to put the lands on the market in compliance with the statute making the grant. But there is no disposition to do that, and the Department of Justice, I am advised, has the matter under consideration. Indeed I know it has it under consideration, and I think it has reached a conclusion to institute some character of suit, the object being to forfeit the grant; at least to forfeit to the Government that portion of the grant which is still held by the company or which is still undisposed of. Whether it is the purpose of the Department of Justice to go beyond that and to institute suit to forfeit lands that were sold, as a good many acres were sold, I am advised, for prices exceeding $2.50 an acre and in quantities greater than 160 acres to one person, I do not know.

But I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to let this matter rest for a time, because it is my information that the Department of Justice will probably request some character of resolution to be offered and adopted which will authorize the prosecution of a suit and outline the character of relief that the Government will be authorized to demand. I do not know certainly that the resolution will be asked for, but I understand there is a question in the mind of the Attorney-General as to whether or not, in a suit brought to forfeit a grant because of noncompliance with the conditions, a decree of forfeiture could be entered without some declaration of Congress in that behalf. It may be he has concluded that it is not necessary to get the Congressional declaration. But I think it would be well to let this matter lie over for a short time, and then if no action shall be taken by the Department or if it shall finally conclude to go ahead without Congressional action, it may be well enough to get the information the Senator asks for. But it would seem to me doubtful even if the Department of Justice concludes to proceed without the Congressional instructions or authority. In other words, I take it that if the Department proposes to prosecute a suit of this character, it would not care in advance to give a public statement touching what its evidence was or on what line it proposes to proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will bear with me, and that the Senator from New Jersey will withhold his objection long enough to have the resolution again read.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly; let it be read again, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. I request that the resolution be again read, so that the Senate can see how little there is in it other than a desire to get information, and that the two Senators who have suggested delay can determine for themselves whether it is worth while.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator will see that I merely call on the President to give us the facts. There is no desire to have the Department of Justice display its hand and give the corporations the evidence upon which the Department may proceed. It is a very simple resolution, and I do not see why there should be objection to it.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to say to the Senator that I do not myself see that there is any objection to the resolution. I do not wish to be understood as suggesting any delay beyond this extent: It might be well to let the matter go over, and then I suggest that some consultation be had——

Mr. TILLMAN. I have here a joint resolution relating to the same subject, which I expect to ask the Congress to pass. I am just about to introduce it and ask to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FULTON. Then I suggest to the Senator that he let this resolution go over and consult with the Department of Justice. I think it would be wise to ascertain whether there is any objection to making a public statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Having been to the Department of Justice and talked with the Attorney-General, I think I know about the attitude which that officer expects to assume.

Mr. FULTON. So far as I am concerned, I make no objection to the present consideration of the resolution. I simply make that suggestion. I do not know that injury can result from the adoption of the resolution. Personally I am very much in favor of some action being taken by the Government, either to compel compliance with the grant or to forfeit the lands to the Government. I think that one or the other course should be pursued. But it is a matter probably at the present time for the Department of Justice to determine which course can be the better pursued and which would promise success the more clearly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest that the resolution might to advantage be made to cover another branch of the same question, and if it were up for consideration I should be inclined to move an amendment to it providing that the inquiry shall extend to the practice of charging the settlers who unexpectedly find themselves upon the land included within the grant, after the survey has been made, with the price of their improvements. It is the practice for the grantees of this land, when they find a settler with valuable improvements upon their land, which were put there under misapprehension in some cases, to charge him not only for the land, but for the value of the improvements, and I think any inquiry directed to this matter at all should include all information in regard to that matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection in the world to the Senator from Idaho amending the resolution, if the Senator from New Jersey will allow us to consider it.

Mr. KEAN. I think the resolution had better go over, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, under objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate, as well as to let the country know what I am trying to accomplish.

The joint resolution (S. R. 48) instructing the Attorney-General to institute certain suits, etc., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas at divers times various railroads and other corporations have received large grants of public lands of the United States, under and by virtue of the acts of the Congress, containing conditions to the effect that such lands should be sold to actual settlers only or in quantities not exceeding for any one purchaser a limit fixed by the act relating thereto, or at a price per acre not greater than an amount mentioned in the act authorizing such grant, to the end that such lands might promptly become the homes of citizens of the United States; and

Whereas it is currently reported and widely believed that the Department of Justice has information to the effect that certain of the corporations aforesaid, or their alleged successors in title, having obtained colorable title to large tracts of land within a State or States of the Pacific slope by virtue of the grants above mentioned, and still holding considerable portions thereof, have violated or evaded the equitable and salutary conditions so, as aforesaid, imposed by the Congress upon such grants for the public good, yet the Congress is not advised that any action has been taken by the Department of Justice to enforce the said conditions or restore the said lands to the public domain: Now therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed, authorized, and empowered to take such proceedings or institute such suit or suits on behalf of the United States as may be necessary, appropriate, or expedient to insure a compliance with the abovementioned conditions or to restore the said lands to the public domain, or to report to the Congress why such action as aforesaid has not been or should not be taken.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 14766. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 13430. An act to authorize the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the city of Hammond, Ind.; and

H. R. 14781. An act to authorize Campbell County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across Powells River.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE AT PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4380) for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for anchorage duty at the port of New York be taken up.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes, at a total cost not to exceed $80,000, the construction, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for anchorage duty at the port of New York, to replace the revenue-cutter Manhattan now performing the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPOSITION AT QUITO, ECUADOR.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have present consideration of the bill (S. 4633) making an appropriation for the participation by the United States in an exposition to be held at Quito, Ecuador.

Mr. BURKETT. Let us go on with the Calendar in its order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURKETT. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 23d instant authorizing and directing the Committee on Finance to make inquiry and report as to the distribution of moneys of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KEAN. I think the resolution ought to be indefinitely postponed. I do not see any object in having it kept on the Calendar to be announced daily. I rose to move the indefinite postponement of the resolution, but I do not see the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] present, and so I will not make the motion. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to understand what disposition has been made of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] rose to move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed, but observing that the senior Senator from Missouri is not in the Chamber, he then asked that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. WARNER. Very well. I was going to call attention to the fact that my colleague is not here.

EXTENSION OF BOUNTY-LAND LAWS.

The bill (S. 1407) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men and the officers and men of the boat companies of the Florida Seminole Indian war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. It had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

A. A. NOON.

The bill (S. 533) for the relief of A. A. Noon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate for the relief of A. A. Noon, of Provo, in the State of Utah, $1,407.55, the same being the amount of judgments and costs against him in suits by the Government of the United States for the extraction of gilsonite from lands within the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, under locations made in good faith and believed to be without the limits of the reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

The joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

LOCATION OF MINERAL CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 129) to validate the location of mineral claims heretofore made by deputy mineral surveyors during their incumbency in office was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, in line 7, page 1, after the word "office," to insert "as deputy mineral surveyors and such locations shall not be deemed to be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title to mining claims heretofore located by persons holding commissions as United States deputy mineral surveyors shall not be held invalid by reason of the fact that such locations were made by deputy mineral surveyors during their incumbency in office as deputy mineral surveyors and such locations shall not be deemed to be in violation of section 452 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Idaho explain the bill briefly?

Mr. HEYBURN. I first desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. In line 7, after the word "office," I move to strike out the words "as deputy mineral surveyors," and before the word "office" to insert the word "such," so as to read "during their incumbency in such office."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. At the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey I would say that this is in the nature of a relief bill. The language of the statute prohibiting employees of the United States Land Office from acquiring title to public lands has been invoked against this class of locations. There is a difference between the different administrations of the Land Office and between the different courts, and between the courts and the Land Office, as to whether or not a deputy mineral surveyor is an employee of the General Land Office. He is not paid at all by the Government under any circumstances. He is a designated officer, with whom it is lawful to make a contract. The individual requiring the work to be done may select any one of these officers without any control or dictation from the Land Office or any of its departments.

There being a question about it, it should be set at rest. Locations have been made by deputy mineral surveyors under the impression that they had the same right to avail themselves of the right to make the location of a mining claim as any other citizen of the United States, and not thinking for a moment that they were within the class prohibited by the language of the act which I have referred to.

A great many titles rest upon such locations. They have passed, as a matter of course, from one to another over a great period of years, and claims that were located by men who held the commission—not located by them in their official capacity, but really by them as ordinary citizens would locate mining claims—have been transferred by them to strangers or to others during the time that they were mere prospects, when they had no value. Large sums of money have been expended upon them in many instances and they have been developed into good mines.

It is the object of the bill merely to relieve against the cloud that may rest upon that class of locations.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the bill may go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Kansas. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2982.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 150 and read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 288. Whoever, being the master or officer of a vessel of the United States, on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, without justifiable cause, beats, wounds, or imprisons any of the crew of such vessel, or withholds from them suitable food and nourishment, or inflicts upon them any cruel and unusual punishment, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal or modify section 4611 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend the section by transposing, in the tenth line, the words "without justifiable cause," so that they will succeed the word "or" in that line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, on page 150, strike out the words "without justifiable cause" where they occur and insert them after the word "or," near the end of the line, so as to read "beats, wounds, or without justifiable cause imprisons," etc.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I should state the purpose, it being an amendment that is made without having been submitted to the committee.

It appears that in 1898 Congress abolished flogging on all classes of vessels. They had abolished it on certain classes of vessels many years before. But one year after the passage of the section as it is reported by the committee flogging was abolished on all classes of vessels, and the language without being transposed would seem to disregard the amendment. It is for that purpose that the transposition was made.

The amendment was agreed to

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 289. Whoever, being of the crew of a vessel of the United States, on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, endeavors to make a revolt or mutiny on board such vessel, or combines, conspires, or confederates with any other person on board to make such revolt or mutiny, or solicits, incites, or stirs up any other of the crew to disobey or resist the lawful orders of the master or other officer of such vessel, or to refuse or neglect their proper duty on board thereof, or to betray their proper trust, or assembles with others in a tumultuous and mutinous manner, or makes a riot on board thereof, or unlawfully confines the master or other commanding officer thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 290. Whoever, being of the crew of a vessel of the United States, on the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, unlawfully and with force, or by fraud, or intimidation, usurps the command of such vessel from the master or other lawful officer in command thereof, or deprives him of authority and command on board, or resists or prevents him in the free and lawful exercise thereof, or transfers such authority and command to another not lawfully entitled thereto, is guilty of a revolt and mutiny, and shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years.

SEC. 291. [Whoever, being a seaman, lays violent hands upon his commander, thereby to hinder and prevent his fighting in defense of his vessel or the goods intrusted to him, is a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.]

SEC. 292. SEC. 293. Whoever, on the high seas, or within the United States, willfully and corruptly conspires, combines, and confederates with any other person, such other person being either within or without the United States, to cast away or otherwise destroy any vessel, with intent to injure any person that may have underwritten or may thereafter underwrite any policy of insurance thereon or on goods on board thereof, or with intent to injure any person that has lent or advanced, or may lend or advance, any money on such vessel on bottomry or respondentia; or whoever, within the United States, builds, or fits out, or aids in building and fitting out, any vessel with intent that the same be cast away or destroyed, with the intent hereinbefore mentioned, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. An amendment should be made in section 293, in line 3, page 153. I move that the word "and," following the word "building," in line 3, be stricken out and the word "or" substituted; so as to read:

whoever, within the United States, builds, or fits out, or aids in building or fitting out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 294. Whoever plunders, steals, or destroys any money, goods, merchandise, or other effects, from or belonging to any vessel in distress, or wrecked, lost, stranded, or cast away, upon the sea, or upon any reef, shoal, bank, or rocks of the sea, or in any other place within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years; and whoever willfully obstructs the escape of any person endeavoring to save his life from such vessel, or the wreck thereof; or whoever holds out or shows any false light, or extinguishes any true light, with intent to bring any vessel sailing upon the sea into danger, or distress, or shipwreck, shall be imprisoned not less than ten years and may be imprisoned for life.

SEC. 296. [Whoever, upon the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maratime jurisdiction of the United States, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, breaks or enters any vessel, with intent to commit any felony, or maliciously cuts, spoils, or destroys any cordage, cable, buoys, buoy-rope, head-fast, or other fast, fixed to the anchor or moorings belonging to any vessel, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.]

SEC. 297. Whoever, upon the high seas or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, willfully and corruptly casts away or otherwise destroys any vessel, of which he is owner, in whole or in part, with intent to prejudice any person that may underwrite any policy of insurance thereon, or any merchant that may have goods thereon, or any other owner of such vessel, shall be imprisoned for life or for any term of years.

SEC. 298. [Whoever, not being an owner, upon the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, willfully and corruptly casts away or otherwise destroys any vessel of the United States to which he belongs, or, willfully, with intent to destroy the same, sets fire to any such vessel, or otherwise attempts the destruction thereof, shall be imprisoned not more than ten years.]

SEC. 299. [Whoever, being engaged in any piratical cruise, or enterprise, or being of the crew of any piratical vessel, lands from such vessel, and on shore commits robbery, is a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.]

The trial for such offense, if committed without the limits of the United States, shall be in the district in which the offender shall be apprehended or first brought.

SEC. 301. [Whoever, being a citizen of the United States, commits any murder or robbery, or any act of hostility against the United States, or against any citizen thereof, on the high seas, under color of any commission from any foreign prince, or state, or on pretense of authority from any person, is, notwithstanding the pretense of such authority, a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.]

SEC. 302. [Whoever, being a citizen or subject of any foreign state, is found and taken on the sea making war upon the United States, or cruising against the vessels and property thereof, or of the citizens of the same, contrary to the provisions of any treaty existing between the United States and the state of which the offender is a citizen or subject, when by such treaty such acts are declared to be piracy, is guilty of piracy, and shall be imprisoned for life.]

SEC. 303. Whoever, being a captain or other officer or mariner of a vessel upon the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, piratically or feloniously runs away with such vessel, or with any goods or merchandise thereof, to the value of $50, or who yields up such vessel voluntarily to any pirate, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

SEC. 304. SEC. 305. [Whoever, being subject to the authority of the United States, shall give, sell, or otherwise supply any arms, ammunition, explosive substance, intoxicating liquor, or opium to any aboriginal native of any of the Pacific islands lying within the twentieth parallel of north latitude and the fortieth parallel of south latitude and the one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude west and one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, not being in the possession or under the protection of any civilized power, shall be fined not more than $50, or imprisoned not more than three months, or both. In addition to such punishment, all articles of a similar nature to those in respect to which an offense has been committed, found in the possession of the offender, may be declared forfeited. If it shall appear to the court that such opium, wine, or spirits have been given bona fide for medical purposes, it shall be lawful for the court to dismiss the charge.]

SEC. 306. All offenses against the provisions of the section last preceding, committed on any of said islands or on the waters, rocks, or keys adjacent thereto, shall be deemed committed on the high seas on board a merchant ship or vessel belonging to the United States, and the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction accordingly.

SEC. 307. The words "vessel of the United States," wherever they occur in this chapter, shall be construed to mean a vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States, or any citizen thereof, or any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN.

CERTAIN OFFENSES IN THE TERRITORIES.

Sec.	Sec.
308. Places within which sections of this chapter shall apply.	314. Incest.
309. Circulation of obscene literature; promoting abortion; how punished.	315. Fornication.
310. Polygamy.	316. Certificates of marriage; penalty for failure to record.
311. Unlawful cohabitation.	317. Prize fights, bull fights, etc.
312. Joinder of counts.	318. Definition of "Pugilistic encounter."
313. Adultery.	319. Train robberies in Territories, etc.

SEC. 308. Except as otherwise expressly provided, the offenses defined in this chapter shall be punished as hereinafter provided, when committed within any Territory or District, or within or upon any place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the record shows that this section is new. Its purpose is to avoid repeating in each section of the chapter the places within which the several sections of the chapter shall apply. It is a general jurisdictional section to avoid oft repeating.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 309. [Whoever shall sell, lend, give away, or in any manner exhibit, or offer to sell, lend, give away, or in any manner exhibit, or shall otherwise publish or offer to publish in any manner, or shall have in his possession for any such purpose, any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, writing, advertisement, circular, print, picture, drawing, or other representation, figure, or image on or of paper or other material, or any cast, instrument, or other article of an immoral nature, or any drug or medicine, or any article whatever, for the prevention of conception, or for causing unlawful abortion, or shall advertise the same for sale, or shall write or print, or cause to be written or printed, any card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind, stating when, where, how, or of whom, or by what means, any of the articles above mentioned can be purchased or obtained, or shall manufacture, draw, or print, or in anywise make any of such articles, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

SEC. 310. [Every person who has a husband or wife living, who marries another, whether married or single, and any man who simultaneously, or on the same day, marries more than one woman, is guilty of polygamy, and shall be fined not more than $500 and imprisoned not more than five years. But this section shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage whose husband or wife by such marriage shall have been absent for five successive years, and is not known to such person to be living, and is believed by such person to be dead, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been dissolved by a valid decree of a competent court, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been pronounced void by a valid decree of a competent court, on the ground of nullity of the marriage contract.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is proper that I should call attention to the fact that this section omits the enumeration of the places to which its provisions shall apply. The existing law provides that—

Every person who has a husband or wife living who, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter marries, etc.

There is no longer a necessity to enumerate the places of jurisdiction in view of the general jurisdictional provision at the beginning of this chapter. It applies only where the United States has jurisdiction.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 311. [If any male person cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be fined not more than $300, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.]

SEC. 312. Counts for any or all of the offenses named in the two sections last preceding may be joined in the same information or indictment.

SEC. 313. Whoever shall commit adultery shall be imprisoned not more than three years; and when the act is committed between a married woman and a man who is unmarried, both parties to such act shall be deemed guilty of adultery; and when such act is committed between a married man and a woman who is unmarried, the man shall be deemed guilty of adultery.

SEC. 314. Whoever, being related to another person within and not including the fourth degree of consanguinity computed according to the rules of civil law, shall marry or cohabit with, or have sexual intercourse with such other so related person, in any Territory, knowing her or him to be within said degree of relationship, shall be deemed guilty of incest, and shall be imprisoned not more than fifteen years.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in reference to section 314, which has just been read, there seems to have been some oversight. The words "in any Territory," which have inadvertently crept in on line 15 on page 161, which is the fifth line of the section, should be stricken out under the general rule which the committee has adopted, and I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 314, on page 161, line 15, after the word "person," it is proposed to strike out the words "in any Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 315. If any unmarried man or woman commits fornication in any Territory, each shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than six months.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move the same amendment in the second line of section 315, which has just been read. The same mistake seems to have run through this print. It is intended that the law shall apply wherever the jurisdiction applies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 315, on page 161, line 19, after the word "fortification," it is proposed to strike out the words "in any Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 316. [Every ceremony of marriage, or in the nature of a marriage ceremony of any kind, in any Territory, whether either or both or more of the parties to such ceremony be lawfully competent to be the subjects of such marriage or ceremony or not, shall be certified by a certificate stating the fact and nature of such ceremony, the full name of each of the parties concerned, and the full name of every officer, priest, and person, by whatever style or designation called or known, in any way taking part in the performance of such ceremony, which certificate shall be drawn up and signed by the parties to such ceremony and by every officer, priest, and person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and shall be by the officer, priest, or other person solemnizing such marriage or ceremony filed in the office of the probate court, or, if there be none, in the office of the court having probate powers in the county or district in which such ceremony shall take place, for record, and shall be immediately recorded, and be at all times subject to inspection as other public records. Such certificate, or the record thereof, or a duly certified copy of such record, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this section to be stated therein in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in which the matter shall be drawn in question. But nothing in this section shall be held to prevent the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence otherwise legally admissible for that purpose. Whoever shall willfully violate any provision of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both. The provisions of this section shall apply only within the Territories of the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the same error to which I called attention in sections 314 and 315 seems to have crept into section 316, which has just been read. I therefore move, in the second line of section 316, to strike out the words "in any Territory."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 316, on page 161, line 23, after the word "kind," it is proposed to strike out the words "in any Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before that section is passed, I simply, for information, wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that in the existing law the words in each instance "in any of the Territories of the United States" appear, which would seem to indicate that this statute was originally enacted with reference to the Territories. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will turn to the last provision in section 316 it will be observed that this language occurs:

The provisions of this section shall apply only within the Territories of the United States.

So it makes the repetition of the language unnecessary.

Mr. BACON. I had not read that far and did not notice that it was limited.

Mr. HEYBURN. In a former section it is stated that the provisions shall apply wherever the jurisdiction of the United States runs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that the text from which he has moved his amendments is not the same as the text which the Secretary has at the desk, so that it is a little difficult to state correctly the Senator's amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. The text in both copies should be the same. They are printed from the same type. I should like to investigate that. The paging is not the same, I am aware. We are reading from a copy prepared especially to be used in the consideration of the bill, and, for convenience, it has the existing law printed on the right-hand side. The language in the sections is the same, but the pages are not the same and the numbers of the lines are not the same. I think, however, the difference is very slight. The correction in section 316 is on the second line of the section, and the statement I made applies just the same, although it is not on the same page. I think, Mr. President, it will be convenient if you had a copy of the other print of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment last submitted by the Senator from Idaho has been agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Referring for a moment to the section which has been under consideration, I notice in other sections the limitation is that the provisions shall apply only within the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia; while in this particular section the words "and the District of Columbia" are omitted. Is that because there is a special law in the District on the subject?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My understanding is that those words were omitted in that section because the District of Columbia has its own law.

Mr. BACON. That is the question I asked.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If they are omitted because of the fact that there is a special law in this District on the subject, very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the understanding of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Furthermore, I would call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to section 308, which is a comprehensive section, and provides that—

Except as otherwise expressly provided, the offenses defined in this chapter shall be punished as hereinafter provided, when committed within any Territory or District, or within or upon any place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

That was a new section adopted for the purpose of avoiding the unnecessary repetition of the jurisdictional feature.

Mr. BACON. But I call attention to the fact that the words there specify "within the Territories of the United States," and there is an omission to specify the District of Columbia. I suppose that was caused by some such fact as that stated by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], that there is a special law in the District of Columbia upon the subject, which makes it unnecessary that this section should be made applicable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we have already amended the section by striking out the words "in any Territory," so as to make it come under the general language. There is a law applicable especially to the District, and yet, in the absence of such a law, this law would also apply.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 317. [Whoever shall voluntarily engage in a pugilistic encounter between man and man or a fight between a man and a bull or any other animal, for money or for other thing of value, or for any championship, or upon the result of which any money or anything of value is bet or wagered, or to see which any admission fee is directly or indirectly charged, shall be imprisoned not more than five years. The provisions of this section shall apply only within the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia.]

SEC. 318. By the terms "pugilistic encounter," as used in the section last preceding, is meant any voluntary fight by blows by means of fists or otherwise, whether with or without gloves, between two or more men, for money or for a prize of any character, or for any other thing of value, or for any championship, or upon the result of which any money or anything of value is bet or wagered, or to see which any admission fee is directly or indirectly charged.

SEC. 319. [Whoever shall willfully and maliciously trespass upon or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive, with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said train or car, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, fireman, brakeman, or any officer or employee connected with said locomotive, train, or car, or upon or against any express messenger or mail agent on said train or in any such car thereof, or to commit any crime or offense against any person or property thereon, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both. Whoever shall counsel, aid, abet, or assist in the perpetration of any of the offenses set forth in this section shall be deemed to be a principal therein. Upon the trial of any person charged with any offense set forth in this section it shall not be necessary to set forth or prove the particular person against whom it was intended to commit the offense, or that it was intended to commit such offense against any particular person.]

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether there has not been some question raised with reference to this section, or a suggestion made as to the advisability of having it amended? Some one, I think, has called my attention to this section who seemed to think it more far-reaching than it appears on its face to be. I have not the memorandum before me and do not recall all the facts now, but I do carry the number of that section in my head. I therefore ask the Senator if any question has been raised as to the propriety of enacting it as it is written or as to the advisability of an amendment of some kind to it?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think it is due the Senate that I should say that the provisions of this section, which are now existing law, are objected to by certain labor organizations, and they have presented their views on the subject to the members of the committee. The objection is directed against the provision contained in the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh lines of the section. The objections, as stated to me, were directed particularly against the provision which I will read:

SEC. 319. [Whoever shall willfully and maliciously trespass upon or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive, with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said train or car, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, fireman, brakeman, or any officer or employee connected with said locomotive, train, or car, or upon or against any express messenger or mail agent on said train or in any such car thereof, or to commit any crime or offense against any person or property thereon, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.

Mr. McLAURIN. What is the penalty—shall be fined and imprisoned to what extent?

Mr. HEYBURN. The penalty provided is that the one guilty shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both. It will be observed that the section is comprehensive of rather a wide range of offenses. The objection urged is not against the graver offense of entering upon a railroad train for the purpose of committing murder or robbery, but it is against the prohibition against entering upon railroad trains for the purpose of committing violence upon any passenger on the train or car, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, fireman, brakeman, officer, etc.

Mr. McLAURIN. What is the number of the section?

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 319. It is claimed that under that section the members of labor organizations are prohibited or punished for going upon trains and taking off men who are working against the rules of their order or in violation of their wishes or of their rights, real or imaginary. The section is existing law, but objection is made to its being perpetuated in this revision.

I inquired of the parties who presented the matter to me if they desired to perpetrate these acts. They gave no satisfactory answer to that question. Then I submitted the further inquiry as to whether or not they thought any person ought to have the right to go upon a train for the purpose of committing those acts, but I received no satisfactory reply to that interrogatory, and the interview terminated. In my judgment and in the judgment of the committee that reported it, the exising law is a wise one and its administration may be safely left to the courts.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I recall that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], when this bill was last before the Senate, asked me, in case the section under discussion should be reached during his absence, to request that it be passed over, not as we have passed over others for final consideration, but be passed over until he can be present. I do not know what the view of the Senator from Missouri may be in regard thereto; but evidently he has some interest in it, and I find that I at the time made a memorandum on my copy of the bill that it was a section that the Senator from Missouri desired to be heard upon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Le it be passed over for the day.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have directed a page to make inquiry, and I am informed that the Senator from Missouri is not in the city.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection to the section going over for the day.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, it does not go over under the general arrangement, but simply goes over to be recurred to when the Senator from Missouri is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; to be recurred to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 319 will be passed over for the present.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, before the section is passed over for the present, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if he does not think the penalty is too severe for some of the offenses that are referred to in this section? My idea is that a man who would go on a car for the purpose of committing an assault and battery upon another would come within the denunciation of this statute. That being so, it seems to me that an imprisonment of twenty years or a fine of $5,000, or both, would be pretty severe. It is true the court would have it in its discretion to make it very much less than that, but I do not think a court ought to be given the discretion that would allow it to impose a penalty of $5,000 and twenty years' imprisonment upon a man who is guilty of assault and battery. In my hurried reading of the section just now, it seemed to me that if a man were to go upon a railroad car for the purpose of committing the offense of assault and battery he would be liable to the severe penalty of $5,000 and twenty years' imprisonment. I think there ought to be some separation of that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the existing law was enacted very recently—in 1902, during the term of the Senator from Mississippi—and I have no doubt it received full consideration by the Judiciary Committee of this body and by both Houses of Congress. The section is existing law, and I suppose it was considered that this kind of an offense partook something of the nature of burglary at nighttime. The going upon a railroad train for a purpose of that kind involves a great many things. It involves the interference with the traffic and the stoppage of the train; it is going where a man is not under the ordinary protection of the law officers, and in a circumscribed room like the body of a car, to commit an offense of this kind places the object of the assault at a very great disadvantage.

It might be possible to separate the sections and prescribe a lesser punishment for a less serious offense, but I have no doubt that that question was seriously considered by the committee of this body which very recently passed upon it, and your joint committee did not feel at all justified in interfering with existing law under those circumstances. It was only in cases where legislation was made up of fragmentary sections of statutes passed long apart that we felt justified in dealing more liberally and freely with them, but where laws had been enacted within the comparatively recent period of a few years——

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Does the Senator not understand that the language, "whoever goes upon a railroad train with the intent to commit any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said car or train," would include a man who should go upon a train with the intent to commit assault and battery, although he might not commit that assault, and that it would make him liable to a fine of $5,000 and twenty years' imprisonment if the court were to see proper to impose such a penalty upon him?

Mr. HEYBURN. It undoubtedly would.

Mr. McLAURIN. Does not the Senator think that would be a very severe penalty for such an offense?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not believe that any court would inflict a penalty so severe, but even an offense of that kind or an intent of that kind might lead to most disastrous results. The Senator from Mississippi will bear in mind that a railroad car is a very circumscribed place and within narrow limits, and to go there and assault a person who is deprived of the protection which the law gives him if he is out in the body of the community not only may result seriously to the party assaulted or intended to be assaulted, but it may engender a riot in the car, and it may result in very serious accident, such as the stoppage of the train or the wrecking of it. However, I do not feel inclined to discuss the wisdom of existing legislation. The committee simply relied upon existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

or remit, in whole or in part, either one of the two kinds, without, in any manner, impairing the legal validity of the other kind, or of any portion of either kind, not pardoned or remitted.

SEC. 325. All Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely—murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes, respectively; and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases. And all such Indians committing any of the above named crimes against the person or property of another Indian or other person within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts and in the same manner, and be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That any Indian who shall commit the offense of rape within the limits of any Indian reservation shall be imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 326. [The circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of South Dakota shall have jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all actions and proceedings in which any person shall be charged with the crime of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, arson, burglary, or larceny, committed within the limits of any Indian reservation in the State of South Dakota. Any person convicted of murder, manslaughter, rape, arson, or burglary, committed within the limits of any such reservation, shall be subject to the same punishment as is imposed upon persons committing said crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That any Indian who shall commit the crime of rape within any such reservation shall be imprisoned at the discretion of the court. Any person convicted of the crime of assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, or larceny, committed within the limits of any such reservation, shall be subject to the same punishment as is provided in cases of other persons convicted of any of said crimes under the laws of the State of South Dakota. This section is passed in pursuance of the cession of jurisdiction contained in chapter one hundred and six, Laws of South Dakota, 1901.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it proper to call attention to the fact that this is not legislation of general application. It has been included within this revision because it seemed to be in the nature of a contract, one might almost say, pursuant to the provisions of the act of cession of jurisdiction. It relates only to South Dakota.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Was that in the enabling act?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was not in the enabling act.

Mr. CURTIS. Was it in a treaty with the Indians?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it was a law enacted in pursuance of an act passed by the legislature of South Dakota making certain concessions and disclaiming certain rights. Pursuant to that Congress enacted this law. Your committee were instructed to revise and codify all laws of a general character, and whether or not this is a law of a general character is a question that may be considered. It is not a serious matter, because the law is not changed; that is, the section reported is existing law, and it could not be changed. I take it that Congress at any time would not undertake to change the provisions of this statute because it is pursuant to a constitutional contract.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recall the criticism which on a former occasion, when there was before us a statute in some respects similar to this, in the fact that it designated the penalty as it might be prescribed in the laws of a State, he made upon legislation of that character.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was the Bull Run Water Company, of Portland, Oreg. There is this difference——

Mr. BACON. No; I was not referring to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh!

Mr. BACON. I was referring to the class of legislation which refers to offenses designated in State laws.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand.

Mr. BACON. The Senator himself called the attention of the Senate to what he considered to be the dangerous features in legislation of this kind. Now this, to a more limited extent, has some of the features which then met with the condemnation of the Senator.

I should like to inquire of him in this connection whether he understands from the language of this law that the reference to the laws of South Dakota is intended to fix the laws existing at the time of the passage of this act or whether this statute itself will be varied with any variation of the laws of South Dakota.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have sent for the laws of South Dakota. This is in the nature of a contract made between the General Government and the State of South Dakota, by which each cedes to the other certain rights, running with certain land, or the jurisdiction over certain territory. It is permanent in its character, because it is not within the power of Congress to change it.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator understand that under this statute whenever the State of South Dakota changes the criminal law with reference to any of these offenses the change is also carried into this statute?

Mr. HEYBURN. I doubt their power to change it.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator doubt the power of South Dakota——

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; to change it.

Mr. BACON. To change her criminal laws?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; in this respect.

Mr. BACON. Well, I will read the section again. I may misunderstand the Senator.

Any person convicted of the crime of assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, or larceny, committed within the limits of any such reservation, shall be subject to the same punishment as is provided in cases of other persons convicted of any of said crimes under the laws of the State of South Dakota.

The question I propound—I do not know that I made myself clear—is whether or not in case the State of South Dakota changes its own laws as to any of these crimes that change will be carried into this statute? I presume the Senator does not mean to say that South Dakota can not change her criminal laws as to offenses outside of reservations. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Under the construction that is given to this class of legislation by the courts of last resort, the laws in force in South Dakota at the time of the passage of this law would not be changed by subsequent legislation by South Dakota. This is one of those cases where Congress adopted the laws of South Dakota existing at the time of the passage of that act. It is not within the power of Congress to recognize the future act of the legislature of a State, because that would be in the nature of a delegation of the power to legislate. On the part of Congress this was an acceptance of the laws of South Dakota existing at the time of the passage of that act. It would not be within the power of Congress, I repeat, under the Constitution to recognize any change that the legislature of South Dakota might make after we had accepted it. I have the laws of South Dakota here now.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean that it would not be within the power of Congress to recognize any change so far as it would affect the reservation? But does the Senator mean, as to the offenses of assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, or larceny committed in South Dakota outside of a reservation, that South Dakota would have no right to change the law?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not, as to any territory outside of that involved in what you might call, not a "treaty," because we do not have treaties between a State and the General Government, but outside this "compact," which is based upon an act of the legislature of South Dakota. It will be found in the session laws of South Dakota for 1901, page 132, and I will read it into the RECORD, so that it will be a part of the consideration of this section:

CHAPTER 106—HOUSE BILL 106—CEDING JURISDICTION TO THE UNITED STATES OVER OFFENSES COMMITTED UPON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

An act ceding to the United States of America jurisdiction over criminal offenses committed upon Indian reservations within the State of South Dakota.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of South Dakota:

SECTION 1. Jurisdiction given to the United States. There is hereby relinquished and given to the United States of America and the officers and courts thereof exclusive jurisdiction and authority to arrest, prosecute, convict, and punish all persons whomsoever shall, upon any Indian reservation within the State of South Dakota, commit any act in violation of the penal laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. Costs not chargeable to South Dakota. No costs or charges incurred in the courts of the United States in the prosecution of offenses committed upon any Indian reservation shall be chargeable to the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 3. To take effect when. This act shall be in full force and effect whenever the jurisdiction hereby relinquished shall be assumed by the United States.

SEC. 4. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved February 14, 1901.

Now, pursuant to that legislation, Congress passed the law of February 2, 1903, 32 Statutes at Large, page 793, chapter 351, which is existing law, upon which section 326, reported by your committee, is based.

Section 326 has simply welded together three sections of the act of February 2, 1903. The committee has not changed the law. It merely brings the three sections together as one. It is rather an unusual condition of legislation, and it is one that perhaps the courts may be called upon to solve.

I think we are not called upon to do more than to determine whether or not it is of such general character as makes it appropriate to be included within the work of your Committee on Revision. If it is not of such general character, then the only thing we need to do is to strike it out, and it will stand among the miscellaneous laws when the final report of the Committee on Revision is made. That, it seems to me, is the only question to be determined. I do not think we are called upon at this time, or that it would be profitable, to go into the question of the wisdom or effect of the legislation, because it is existing law exactly as we have reported it.

Mr. BACON. But we want to know what the law means when we come to revise it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it is not properly here, it is not material to go into that question.

Mr. BACON. We certainly ought to know what are the penalties we prescribe in a penal statute. I do not know whether I made myself understood to the Senator from Idaho, and, with his permission, I will repeat the question.

The provision of the bill which has been read and to which I have made reference, is that which codifies the third section of the act of 1903, and as it is there in more concise form, I will read it. Practically the bill reported by the committee is the same. Section 3 of the existing law is this:

SEC. 3. That any person convicted of the crime of assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, or larceny, committed within the limits specified in section 1 of this act, shall be subject to the same penalties and punishment as are all other persons convicted of either of said crimes under the laws of the State of South Dakota.

Now, remembering the criticism which the Senator made upon similar general statutes which we have passed over and which had been repeated substantially in the bill reported by the committee, as to the unwisdom of providing penalties which should be specified not distinctly in the act itself, but designated only by reference to State laws—having that in mind and recollecting the forcible suggestions of the Senator in regard thereto—I ask whether or not it was the understanding of the committee that this section as repeated in the proposed bill would fix the penalty for either one of these particular offenses specified according to the statutes of South Dakota as they existed at the time of the enactment of the law in 1903, or whether these offenses committed on a reservation would have attached as a penalty upon conviction under the laws of the State of South Dakota as they might be at the time of the trial? That is the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under the decisions of the courts as the law now stands the penalties would have to be as fixed on the 2d day of February, 1903. There could be no delegation of a future power on the part of the legislature of South Dakota under any other law.

Mr. BACON. The Senator thinks that, in case the State of South Dakota should change its penal laws, it would not change the penalty which is now determined?

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. BACON. In other words, we simply refer to the laws existing in 1903 for the purpose of ascertaining what the penalties are?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am quite certain that is the case. It is not within the power of South Dakota so to change its criminal law or the penalties prescribed by the criminal law as to affect the provisions of this act. I am quite satisfied that under existing law, as interpreted by the courts of last resort, the penalties that might be imposed by the United States courts under the provisions of this act would be as they were on February 2, 1903. To hold otherwise would be to permit South Dakota to legislate so as to affect the judgment of United States courts.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, of course. The Senator does not then regard this section as open to the same objections that he himself suggested as to the sections which were passed over?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, I do regard this as being open to exactly the same objections, and it was probably for that reason more than another that I called the attention of the Senate to the section when it was read. I, however, had expected that it would be the judgment of the Senate that this section should go out on revision and rest as a part of the miscellaneous law. The committee held otherwise.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator that this is less objectionable than a miscellaneous law, for the reason that the only thing that is referred to the statutes of South Dakota for determination is the question of the penalty.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is all.

Mr. BACON. Whereas the miscellaneous law refers to the statute law the question of the offenses as well as the penalty.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I think it is less objectionable than the one the Senator previously criticised.

Mr. HEYBURN. The section the Senator refers to is section 286, which is much broader in its terms and which more violently violates what I have suggested as being the proper rule. But I am not at all in sympathy with this class of legislation, whether it be in a general or a special law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, while the section now under discussion is existing law, passed as recently as February 2, 1903 (and for that reason the committee felt constrained to incorporate it in this revision), personally I see no reason for its existence at all.

It will be observed that by the provisions of the law of South Dakota jurisdiction is ceded to the United States over these Indian reservations, the act to take effect as soon as such jurisdiction shall be assumed by the United States. Therefore, under that act all that it was necessary for the United States to do was to accept jurisdiction over these Indian reservations, and the moment jurisdiction was assumed over the Indian reservation, or, in other words, the moment the terms of the act of cession of South Dakota were accepted by the United States, the penal laws of the United States at once became effective and were extended over the Indian reservations.

So it seems to me the passage of this act in its existing terms is altogether an unnecessary thing, and perhaps may result in complications that none of us can just now foresee. If the committee had felt that it was within the scope of its duties, it would have stricken out the whole matter and provided a different law, simply accepting the terms of the cession. Then we would have gotten rid of the question which the Senator from Georgia raises with reference to adopting the laws of South Dakota, and these other questions.

It will be observed that section 326 limits the provision as to the crimes enumerated, namely, murder, manslaughter, assault, and so on, while there may be numerous other crimes as worthy of punishment under other general provisions of the laws of the United States. I see no reason why the act should have been adopted at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before passing this section I feel inclined to say that in my judgment South Dakota could release nothing to the United States in the way of its jurisdiction beyond the single provision contained in the Constitution of the United States. There is no power in the State to transfer its jurisdiction to the United States except as given in the Constitution, and that is for the limited purposes enumerated—for docks, arsenals, and so forth, and the grounds incident and necessary thereto. I do not know of any power resting in a State to cede to the United States its jurisdiction for the punishment of crime within ordinary territory, and it is because the consideration of this section opens up such a wide range of consideration of legal propositions that I hesitated to do more than merely call attention to the fact of the anomalous position in which this section stands before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. President, if the State could not cede it under the Constitution of the United States, the United States could not accept it; and in my judgment the act of the legislature of South Dakota and the act of Congress are both unenforceable and without any basis of authority under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator from Idaho to question the right of a State to cede jurisdiction over any part of its territory except under the provision of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. HEYBURN. I question its authority to cede jurisdiction over any part of its territory except as indicated in the provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. The jurisdiction yielded in this case is only over Indian reservations, is it not?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was only over Indian reservations. If the United States can have jurisdiction over an Indian reservation it is not by reason of the cession of that right by the State. It is by reason of the subject-matter of the jurisdiction as it attaches to the individual or to the property right.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Was not this jurisdiction yielded for the purpose of avoiding a conflict of jurisdiction? I do not question the Senator's statement. I am simply trying to find out the facts.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer the Senator's inquiry in a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. Was it not in order that there should be no conflict of jurisdiction and no question upon that point?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator correctly states the purpose that the legislature had in view and the purpose that Congress had in view, but without going elaborately into a consideration of the question I have suggested that neither the State nor the United States had the power to do what they have done. I did not intend to precipitate a debate upon the right of a State under the Constitution to cede the power that it has by virtue of its being a State, because that is a large question. But it must be clear that the legislature had no right to confer jurisdiction upon United States courts. United States courts have their jurisdiction by reason of the Constitution of the United States and laws passed pursuant to the Constitution of the United States and in harmony with it, and it is not competent for the State to give anything to the Government of the United States, as it is permitted to do so by the express provision of the Constitution, which is not contained in Article I, section 8.

Congress shall have power * * * to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress—

Of course that is the District of Columbia—

become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

Now, that is the whole scope of the power of the State to sell or cede or give jurisdiction over a single foot of its territory. If the United States has jurisdiction over Indians or Indian affairs because of the character of the subject-matter, that is another question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he is familiar with the case, the title of which I have forgotten for the moment, known as the "Fort Leavenworth case," coming from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I know it. It is the Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company v. Howe (114 U. S., p. 525).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, that was a case, as I recall it, where the Supreme Court of the United States held that the section of the Constitution which the Senator has read should receive a broad construction, and in that case they applied this provision of the Constitution to a case where the United States had not acquired the land with the consent of the State, but where the land had been reserved for a military reservation, and afterwards the State legislature passed an act similar to the act which we now have under consideration, passed by the legislature of South Dakota, ceding jurisdiction to the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was for military purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. The court held in the Leavenworth case that it came within the language:

For the erection of forts.

Fort Leavenworth is a great military fort at times, as well as a military post, and it was so, if my recollection is not at fault, before the State of Kansas was formed, when Kansas was yet a Territory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Government reserved the land when Kansas was a Territory, at a time when it was subject to any act of Congress, and where there were no State sovereignty or States rights behind it. It was simply carried forward. There was a neglect on the part of somebody to make the formal transfer. When Kansas was admitted to statehood no provision was made for this military tract, what is now Fort Leavenworth, and it was necessary to patch it up afterwards by legislation. The question came into the United States Supreme Court, and under those circumstances, it having been a military post before the State existed and it having been carried forward as an actual military post afterwards, the court would not draw a fine line, but suggested that the State of Kansas through the legislative process should cede this land to the Government, which it did; and the court held that that having been done, the jurisdiction of the United States was as complete over it under this provision of the Constitution as though it had been regularly ceded after statehood. I think that is the full force and scope of the Leavenworth case.

I think we had best let this law alone, and let the courts deal with it, if they should ever have occasion to do so. I do not believe it is necessary for us to do more than to investigate it so far as to determine the fact that we do not desire to investigate it any further or at all; and unless there is some objection, I will ask that the section be passed, and, probably, when it comes up for final consideration, ask that it be dropped out.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am perfectly content with the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho. Do I understand him to desire that the entire section of the bill, 326, be passed, or simply that section 3 of the act of 1903 be allowed to remain as it is without revision?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest that the entire section be passed. If you strike out the final clause, then you leave nothing but administrative law, which has no place in a criminal code. The legislature of South Dakota provided that "this act shall be in full force and effect whenever the jurisdiction hereby relinquished shall be assumed by the United States." "Assumed" is rather an indefinite term. It might be by legislation or it might be by general consent. But that is immaterial. The act of Congress accepting this cession of jurisdiction would not be within the criminal code at all, and should not appear in it. It would be administrative law and would be in the body of administrative laws that will be reported under an entirely different head.

Mr. BACON. I understand the suggestion of the Senator to be that section 326 of existing law, which is a restatement of the act of February 2, 1903, shall be allowed to remain as it is without revision?

Mr. HEYBURN. Shall be passed.

Mr. BACON. Shall be passed.

I do not want to say anything further on it, except in reply to one suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, I think it proper to say that the section of the Constitution which he has read as to the right to exercise exclusive legislation on the part of Congress, while it might be construed as a limitation on the power of the United States Government as to the territory in which it should exercise jurisdiction, could not possibly, I think, be construed to be a restriction upon the power of the State to alienate its territory for that purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, Mr. President, there must be a party capable of granting as well as receiving, and of receiving as well as granting. While the State might under an interpretation of the language of the act creating the State have such power under this provision, which is a limitation upon the power of the United States, it is very clear that the United States has no power to receive a grant of that kind.

Mr. BACON. The Senator speaks of an act creating the State. The Senator will recollect that some States were never created by act, but themselves created the Federal Government. Consequently it could not apply to any such State. No one of the original thirteen States was created by act of Congress, and they do not derive any of their powers from an act of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; but South Dakota was created by an act of Congress——

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it was created pursuant to that provision of the Constitution which contemplated the creation of States.

Mr. BACON. Of course if there is anything in the enabling act which restricts that power, and under the condition of which the State was admitted, that would be binding. That is a different thing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 327. In all cases where the accused is found guilty of the crime of murder in the first degree, or rape, the jury may qualify their verdict by adding thereto, "without capital punishment;" and whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid, the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

SEC. 328. The court before which any person is convicted of murder in the first degree, or rape, may, in its discretion, add to the judgment of death that the body of the offender be delivered to a surgeon for dissection; and the marshal who executes such judgment shall deliver the body, after execution, to such surgeon as the court may direct; and such surgeon, or some person appointed by him, shall receive and take away the body at the time of execution.

SEC. 329. [Whoever directly commits any act constituting an offense defined in any law of the United States, or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces, or procures its commission, is a principal.]

Mr HEYBURN. I think it only fair to say that section 329 is new legislation in effect. I call the attention of Senators to it:

Whoever directly commits any act constituting an offense defined in any law of the United States, or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces, or procures its commission, is a principal.

That law exists.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator from Idaho in what regard that definition differs from the definition at common law?

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not differ in effect, but it differs in method of statement. Many States have adopted this provision in order that the party who is an accessory may be punished without waiting for the punishment of the principal. It seems to me to be a legal necessity, because very often the principal escapes. This provision seemed to the committee to be eminently wise. It has been adopted in most of the States.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, is it not true that in those States where this legislation has been had, the language of the statute goes a little further and specifically provides (I know it is so in some jurisdictions) what the Senator from Idaho states as the effect of the present proposed statute; in other words, it specifically provides in such cases that such accessory may be brought to punishment before the conviction of the principal?

Mr. HEYBURN. We have already provided for that.

Mr. BACON. In another section?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw the suggestion, then.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 330. [Whoever, except as otherwise expressly provided by law, being an accessory after the fact to the commission of any offense defined in any law of the United States, shall be imprisoned not exceeding one-half the longest term of imprisonment, or fined not exceeding one-half the largest fine prescribed for the punishment of the principal, or both, if the principal is punishable by both fine and imprisonment; or if the principal is punishable by death, then an accessory shall be imprisoned not more than ten years.]

SEC. 331. Whoever, without lawful authority, receives or takes into custody any vessel, goods, or other property feloniously taken by any robber or pirate against the laws of the United States, knowing the same to have been feloniously taken, and whoever, knowing that such pirate or robber has done or committed any such piracy or robbery, on the land or at sea, receives, entertains, or conceals any such pirate or robber, is an accessory after the fact to such robbery or piracy, and shall be imprisoned not more than ten years.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it proper to call attention to the fact that we have omitted the fine that is provided for in existing law and have increased the term of imprisonment in this section. The section should have been printed in brackets. That omission is due to an oversight in the mark for the printer. The committee have made a different arrangement of the punishment.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

SEC. 332. All offenses which may be punished by death, or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, shall be deemed felonies. All other offenses shall be deemed misdemeanors.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will call attention to section 332, that it may appear orderly in the RECORD. I have been asked a number of times during the consideration of this bill whether or not there was a provision defining felonies and misdemeanors. I would call attention to the section just read as answering that question.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

SEC. 333. [In all cases of murder or manslaughter, the crime shall be deemed to have been committed at the place where the injury was inflicted, or the poison administered, or other means employed which caused the death, without regard to the place where the death occurs.]

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the learned Senator in this connection what he would say as to the effect of that provision of law in a case where a mortal wound was inflicted or poison administered in another jurisdiction and where the party died within the jurisdiction of the United States. There is a principle of law——

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a very embarrassing question.

Mr. BACON. There is a principle of law which this section is intended to make definite that will make the offense indictable in the jurisdiction where the party died. This provision is all-sufficient if the original offense is committed inside of the United States, and the ultimate consequence occurs also in the United States. In that case there is no difficulty, because he can then be indicted in the jurisdiction of the State, for instance, or Territory where the wound was inflicted or the poison administered. But whether it would reach the case of a wound inflicted in Canada or poison administered in Canada and death consequent thereon in the United States is another question. I do not know what the law of Canada may be on that subject, but if the law of Canada were different on the subject the party might escape punishment entirely.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was under this provision of law that the difficulty occurred as to the jurisdiction in the Guiteau case, to which I referred recently. It is necessary to determine whether the place of the wound or the place of the death shall govern. There is a vast amount of adjudication upon this question, but it has been resolved down finally in this country to the principle expressed in the section as reported by the committee. It was the decision of the court in the Guiteau case that the jurisdiction attached at the place where the wound was inflicted. If the Senator will refer to the decision in that case, he will find a very comprehensive consideration of this question and of the authorities bearing upon it.

The United States courts commenced to deal with the question very early in the last century, as in a country divided up as is this by State lines and by various geographical lines the question must often arise. The committee adopted the conclusion reached by the United States court in that case, thinking that it best expressed the ultimate wisdom upon the subject.

Mr. BACON. I would think a much better provision would be one which would give jurisdiction to the court either where the original blow was struck or the poison administered or where the party died, on the same principle, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, that jurisdiction is given to the courts in a case of larceny, either in the jurisdiction in which the larceny was originally committed or in any jurisdiction into which the party may carry the stolen goods.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, there——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me a moment. I have not much to say. I know in some jurisdictions—I do not think I can be mistaken in the fact—it is provided that the party can be indicted for murder in the jurisdiction in which the victim died. I do not see any inconsistency in conferring jurisdiction on the courts of either particular place.

I do not make this suggestion in any captious spirit or in any criticism of the committee, but it does occur to me that where we have countries lying on the north and the south of us, as in the case of Mexico and Canada, and where there is such frequent intercommunication and such easy opportunity for the escape of a criminal from one jurisdiction into the other, unless we know that there are similar laws in those countries, it would be very advisable that this provision should be expanded, so that the courts either at the place of the original offense where the wound was inflicted or where the poison was administered or the courts where the party dies should have jurisdiction to indict for the offense of murder or whatever the offense might be.

If it be true that Canada, for instance, has a law which would not permit of the indictment of a person in Canada who had inflicted a mortal wound in that jurisdiction upon one who died in the United States, it would be a most unfortunate condition of affairs if that man could not be indicted either in the United States or in Canada.

Mr. HEYBURN. The difficulty has arisen in a number of cases upon extradition. It will be apparent that under our extradition laws it is entirely convenient to bring a party who has committed the crime of murder in this country back for trial. If the deadly blow were struck in Canada, it is a violation of the law of Canada, and not of the law of the United States. The death of the party is an incident to the striking of the blow; it is not the crime. The crime does not consist in the party dying; it consists in the striking of the blow that results in death. So that seems to fix the place where the crime was committed.

The case of the offense following the goods is not applicable to a case of murder, because frequently difficulty has occurred from the inability of the courts to command the presence of the body of the party killed. There are some old statutes which provide for the presence of the body or that make it necessary that the body of the party killed shall be within the jurisdiction where the party is tried. But that is not the law in this country now. So the law has been construed in the light of the convenience of extradition treaties for the purpose of bringing parties back to be tried where the law was really violated.

I can readily see that we would have a very strong feeling and a very strong disposition to punish a party who killed an American citizen by striking the deathblow on the Canadian side of the line and our citizen should rush over within his home jurisdiction. We would naturally want to get the criminal. But we must rely to some extent in a case of that kind upon that spirit of comity, if I may so designate it, which prompts one friendly and civilized nation to enforce the law on behalf of the citizens of another. If a citizen of the United States should receive a mortal blow in Canada at the hands of a citizen of that country, the party striking the blow would be indictable and triable in Canada.

I think that no miscarriage of justice or failure of justice would result from the enforcement of the law the committee has reported.

Mr. BACON. If the Canadian law is just as we propose to make it here. If that is the common law, it is not necessary to put this provision into the statute; and if it is not the common law we have no guaranty that such is the law in Canada unless we know what is the statute there.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make an answer in that connection, if the Senator will permit an interruption.

The common law is not equally applicable everywhere. In the Guiteau case it was necessary for the court, I almost feel justified in saying, to strain a point to make the common law applicable. They had to engraft it upon the District of Columbia through its inheritance of the laws of Maryland, of which this territory had been a part. It has always seemed to me that that was rather a radical interpretation of the law, but it was necessary that the court should reach out and appropriate any principle of law that could be made at all applicable.

Had it not been that the common law had been adopted in Maryland prior to the cession of the portion constituting the District of Columbia, there would have been no jurisdiction within which Guiteau could have been tried. That was the unfortunate condition existing at that time. The United States Supreme Court so held.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the decisions of the courts upon this particular matter, as I remember them, are in most hopeless confusion. Some of the States have undertaken to pass laws such as those suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], namely, that a prosecution for murder might take place where the death occurred, irrespective of the place where the mortal wound was inflicted.

That was done in the State of Michigan, for example. The supreme court of Michigan, by a divided court, held that the legislation was valid. I do not recall now the volume in which the case will be found, but in that case there is a very strong dissenting opinion by Chief Justice Campbell, holding the contrary view.

A similar statute was passed, I think, in Massachusetts and it was held valid there. A statute of the same character was enacted in the State of New Jersey, and the supreme court of New Jersey held that the statute was invalid. Numerous other courts have held the same. My opinion is that the great weight of authority is that a statute of that kind, undertaking to provide that a murderer may be prosecuted where the person dies, irrespective of where the mortal wound was inflicted, is invalid. I think the weight of authority is that way.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I am quite confident that that is the statute in my State and has been the law for a long time. I have sent for the book to see if I can find it. I want to say to Senators that I do not profess to be a criminal lawyer, and what practice I have had has been somewhat on the other side of the court. At the same time, it is a very interesting and a very important subject, and I think it ought to have due attention from the Senate in the enactment of a body of penal law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know, of course, what the provision of the laws of the Senator's State may be, but I know that some of the States have undertaken to make that provision, and in some States the provision has been held to be valid, but I think in the majority of the States the contrary has been held.

Mr. BACON. I think the cause for the enactment of a law of that kind in my State was in the old days when dueling was in fashion, and the young men used to go across the river for the purpose of indulging in a pastime of that kind, when sometimes, unfortunately, there was a mortal wound inflicted and death occurred upon the return to the State. But, of course, that condition of affairs has entirely passed. I do not think there has been any dueling in the State of Georgia in forty years, certainly not in thirty years. Still I believe that was the condition of affairs which gave rise to the enactment of that law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. While this subject was under consideration before the committee, I had occasion to look into it to a somewhat limited extent, and I found the authorities to be as I have stated.

The matter is discussed by Mr. Bishop in his work on Criminal Law, and Mr. Bishop gives it as his very positive opinion that statutes of a character such as the Senator says exist in the State of Georgia are absolutely invalid, because, he says, the offense of murder is not committed where the victim dies; that is a mere consequence, but it is not a crime; the crime is committed where the mortal wound is inflicted, provided the victim dies within a year and a day thereafter.

Mr. BACON. What would the Senator say in a case where, as is entirely practicable and sometimes occurs, a man standing on one side of a line dividing two jurisdictions fires a shot which kills a man on the other side of the line? That has occurred, and it is liable to occur.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, that has occurred, and I think there is no difficulty in that sort of a case. It falls within an entirely different principle. There the mortal wound is inflicted where the shot takes effect, and not where the force was set in operation. I think it was held in a recent poisoning case in California, as I recall it, that where the poisoned candy had been sent from one part of the United States into another State the crime was committed where the poisoned candy was received and eaten.

Mr. BACON. That is entirely in conflict with the general principle upon which the statute would fix the place where the wound was inflicted as the place of jurisdiction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, I think not, Mr. President. I think it is in entire harmony with the general principle. The courts hold that where a man standing upon one side of a State line shoots across the State line into another State and inflicts a mortal wound the murder is committed where the mortal wound is inflicted. If a man happened to be within the same State where the person inflicting the wound was, of course the crime of murder would be committed in that State. If the person who receives the mortal wound is in another State, the offense of murder is committed in that State, because that is where the mortal wound is inflicted.

Mr. BACON. I have that section of the Georgia statute before me. I find that I am not entirely accurate, but I am partially so. The general principle which is recognized in this proposed statute is recognized also in the Georgia statute so far as it relates to a wound inflicted in one county where death occurs in another county. In that case the county in which the wound is inflicted is given jurisdiction over the offense.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But the succeeding section varies to some extent that principle, and is the one which I had in mind when I stated that there was a provision of that kind in the Georgia law. The section to which I refer reads:

If such wound—

The statute is speaking now of a homicide by a wound inflicted or by the administering of poison—

If such wound be given or poison administered upon soil the jurisdiction over which has been ceded to the United States, within the geographical limits of this State, or within the territory of an adjoining State, and death shall ensue therefrom in any county in this State, the indictment shall be found and the cause tried in the county where the death occurs.

I knew there was a provision of that kind in the Georgia law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; but that character of legislation has been held, I remember very clearly, in the State of New Jersey to be invalid.

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator, if he will pardon an interruption, that that clause has been under challenge in the State of Georgia, and has been determined by the supreme court of the State to be valid in the thirty-fourth volume of Georgia reports.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was determined to be valid?

Mr. BACON. Yes; was determined to be valid.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the supreme court of Georgia is in harmony with the decisions in the States of Michigan and Massachusetts, but not in harmony with what I believe to be the weight of authority on this question. I was going to call attention to one phase of this matter which seems to require that some such provision as this should be adopted. Under existing law it seems to be held by the Supreme Court and by the Federal courts generally that, in the absence of some statute upon the subject, before a person could be convicted of murder both the blow and the death must happen within the sovereignty of the prosecuting power. For example, in the case of United States v. Hewecker, 79 Federal Reporter, page 61, the court, speaking on this subject, says:

In some statutes that have been referred to, ancient and modern, the term "murder" is, perhaps, used in a general sense by way of recital or reference only, meaning, possibly, any malicious homicide. But the term "murder" in its strict and legal sense, and as importing a legal offense, has a more limited meaning. Apart from some—

And this is the part I call especial attention to—

Apart from some special statute, it is said to be necessary, in order to constitute the offense of "murder," that the blow and the death happen under the same sovereignty, and that the death occur within a year and a day after the felonious act.

That seems to be followed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ball v. The United States (140 U. S. Reports, p. 133), where the court, speaking of the indictment, says:

This fails to aver either the time or place of the death. By the common law, both time and place were required to be alleged. It was necessary that it should appear that the death transpired within a year and a day after the stroke, and the place of death, equally with that of the stroke, had to be stated, to show jurisdiction in the court. The controlling element which distinguished the guilt of the assailant from a common assault was the death within a year and a day, and also within the same jurisdiction.

So that being so, and it being conceded by the court that the principle may be controlled by special statute, it seemed to the committee to be necessary to provide that special statute; otherwise, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we might be confronted with a case where the mortal blow was inflicted under one sovereignty and the death happened under another, and the United States would be powerless to enforce the law against murder.

Mr. BACON. But the question I had in mind was not directed so much to the wisdom of this provision, which gives jurisdiction to the court in the territory or place where the wound was inflicted, as it was to the question whether it would not be wise to enlarge it, so as to give jurisdiction at either the place where the wound was inflicted or the place where the party died. In view of the fact that we have one rule in one jurisdiction and another rule in another, in that way recognizing the validity of either or both, it occurred to me that possibly it might be in the interest of justice and the enforcement of law if it was given to either jurisdiction; but the committee has doubtless given the subject careful consideration, and I will not press the point if it does not meet with their approval.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the rule adopted by the committee is undoubtedly valid and that it would undoubtedly be sustained by the court; but, if we adopted the contrary rule, it would be an experiment, to say the least, and my impression is that we had better adopt the rule which we know will be enforced by the court and held to be valid by the court, rather than to adopt a rule about which there may be considerable doubt.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call attention to the fact that Congress has always recognized the rule as we have adopted it in this section. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the expression in the existing law, which was approved March 3, 1857. Section 3 of the existing law provides:

Or who upon any such waters—

That is describing the jurisdiction—

maliciously strikes, stabs, wounds, poisons, or shoots at any other person, of which striking, stabbing, wounding, poisoning, or shooting such other person dies, either on land or at sea, within or without the United States, shall suffer death.

You will see that Congress prescribed that the party should suffer death by reason of having struck the blow within the jurisdiction, but they did not provide——

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the suggestion that it is important to retain the jurisdiction where the blow was struck. I do not differ as to that, but I am only in doubt as to whether it would not be wise to extend the jurisdiction, so that in a case where the party may have been struck in one jurisdiction and died in another jurisdiction he would be indictable. That is the only point whatever in the suggestion I have made. It is to meet a case where the blow might have been struck in another jurisdiction, and where it is possible that under the law of that jurisdiction the party could not be indicted unless he died within that jurisdiction.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think this embarrassment comes from the decision of the United States Supreme Court as it now stands—that the jurisdiction can rest in but one place or one sovereignty; and we shall have to select between the jurisdiction and where the blow was struck and where the death occurred. The Supreme Court has already held in a very well-considered case that the jurisdiction under the law as it is here—for this law of 1857 was in force when they rendered the opinion—should be where the blow was struck.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 334. Words used in this title in the present tense include the future as well as the present; words used in the masculine gender include the feminine and neuter; the singular number includes the plural, and the plural the singular; the word "person" and the word "whoever" include a corporation as well as a natural person; writing includes printing and typewriting, and signature or subscription includes a mark when the person making the same intended it as such. The words "this title," wherever they occur herein, shall be construed to mean this act.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if I understand the arrangement which was made by the Senators in charge of the bill when the bill was taken up, it was agreed that the sections which were altogether new should not be acted upon, but should be passed over for final consideration hereafter. Is not this section one of that class?

Mr. HEYBURN. This is merely a designation of definitions. I think it is hardly of sufficient technical importance to be now passed over.

Mr. BACON. With that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will see it is merely giving the definitions applying to the preceding sections.

Mr. BACON. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will suggest, as there seems to be a desire for an executive session, that we finish the reading of the bill proper, deferring the reading of the repealing section until another session.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 335. The omission of the words "hard labor" from the provisions prescribing the punishment in the various sections of this act shall not be construed as depriving the court of the power to impose hard labor as a part of the punishment in any case where such power exists.

SEC. 336. The arrangement and classification of the several sections of this title have been made for the purpose of a more convenient and orderly arrangement of the same, and therefore no inference or presumption of a legislative construction is to be drawn by reason of the chapters under which any particular section is placed.

SEC. 337. The crimes and offenses defined in this title shall be cognizable in the circuit and district courts of the United States, as prescribed in sections 563 and 629 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there are four sections—less than a page—which belong to the body of the bill, and I will ask that they be read, passing over the repealing section, which is section 338. Then I will ask to lay the bill aside, but I should like before doing so to leave it in an orderly way.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any particular significance in the last three sections which have been read, but they might be material. They relate, however, to the question of the construction of statutes. I do not know that there is any objection to those three sections—I am not speaking now about section 334; that seems to be entirely innocuous and to merely relate to style, if I am correct; but I think sections 335, 336, and 337, without having in mind any particular criticism upon either one of them, had better lie over with the other sections which have been passed over, because they are of a most radical and material nature.

Mr. HEYBURN. There will be no difficulty in recurring to them.

Now, I should like to pass over the repealing section, which covers several pages, and let the last four sections be read, so that the body of the bill will have been entirely read, if there be no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The part of the bill referred to by the Senator from Idaho will be passed over, and the Secretary will resume reading with section 339.

Mr. BACON. I do not understand the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is that we pass over section 338, and then finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. BACON. The Senator proposes to pass that section over for future consideration?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that we let that section lie over.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I have no objection to that course.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 339. The repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this title shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause prior to said repeal or modifications, but all liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if section 339 is the existing law?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. It is in explanation of the methods of the committee in arranging and organizing existing law. Such provisions are always necessary in the preparation of codes.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I have read section 339 and I am content with that. Now, let section 340 be read, and I will follow it. By reason of the difference in the paging I was unable to refer to the particular sections which were being read.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

SEC. 340. All offenses committed, and all penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred prior to the taking effect hereof, under any law embraced in, or changed, modified, or repealed by this title, may be prosecuted and punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 341. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings, or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures, embraced in, modified, changed, or repealed by this title, shall not be affected thereby; and all suits or proceedings for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to the taking effect hereof may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time and with the same effect as if said repeal had not been made.

SEC. 342. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of July, 1908.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REVENUE CUTTER ON THE COAST OF OREGON.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have here a short bill, local in character, reported from the Committee on Commerce, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is Senate bill No. 4098.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4098) for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for duty on the Pacific coast, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "on the," to strike out "Pacific coast with headquarters at Astoria, Oreg.," and insert "coast of Oregon," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the construction, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a steam vessel of the first class for the Revenue-Cutter Service, for duty on the coast of Oregon, is hereby authorized, at a total cost not to exceed $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for duty on the coast of Oregon."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.
